THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Our Dry Lawn.

Go to Breeze & Bain's where a large stock of hose, sprinklers, watering cans and mowers are kept at prices within the reach of all. d141

Under the Gaslight

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Ladies' and children's parasols cheap, an extensive range to select from at Turnbull's.

Better Return It.

The party who picked up Maurice O'Heron's rubber coat is known. The coat should be returned to the Auburn Mills office so as to save further trouble. 1d142

Flowers.

The Firemen would be much obliged if ladies who can spare some bouquets would leave them at the Fire Hall on Monday afternoon, for use in the procession on Tuesday. One of the Firemen will be at the fire station, opposite Hall, Innes & Co.'s, on Monday afternoon to receive what is sent.

Commenced.

Work has been commenced at the "Romaine" brick factory in making alterations in the building so as to make it suit the manufacture of bridges. It will be some time before it will be ready for Mr. Law.

Personal.

Messrs. A. McNeil, John Fanning and T. Rutherford, representative from Peterborough to the High Court of the Canadian Order of Forester, which has been in session during the past four days at Berlin, have returned to town.

Gun Club.

The following is the score of the Gun Club at Friday's meet:—

H. Neil	0	0	1	1	1	0	1	1	1	1	7
E. J. Hartley	0	0	1	0	1	1	1	0	0	0	4
M. Millar	0	0	1	1	0	0	1	0	1	0	4
R. Tivey	0	0	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	8
R. Muncaster	0	0	0	1	0	1	0	1	0	1	4
H. W. Kent	1	1	1	1	1	0	0	0	0	1	8

The Committee.

A meeting of the Jubilee celebration committee was held in the Fire Hall on Friday evening. All of the committees reported progress. Another meeting will be held this evening for the purpose of assigning position in the procession.

Their Celebration.

The Salvation Army are going to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee on June 21st. In the barracks "a big Jubilee and exhibition of living wonders" will be held "and war memories will be related,, Adjutant Bolton will be in command.

Decoration.

Decorations are being prepared in all manners for Jubilee Day, The Sons of England are erecting a large arch on George street. The Bank of Ontario, Bank of Montreal, Town Buildings and Stevenson's office are to be decorated and illumated in a unique manner. The people seem determined to make this Jubilee day a red letter one for Peterborough. They might as well, for it isn't likely they'll ever have the chance again.

The Jubilee.

Mr. F. W. Scott is issuing a Jubilee publication, which will make its appearance in a few days. It contains the history of Peterborough from 1818 to the present, interesting editorial matter, an efficient programme of the events down for the Jubilee celebration and other matters of interest. The publication will be circulated free, the number issued being three thousand. Merchants will find it a good medium for advertising.

Fresh patterns in Carpets just arrived at Turnbull's, intending purchasers should see them, they are special value.

Zozo, the Magic Queen.

Opera House—June 12, "Zozo" the Magic Queen, reigned supreme in her fairy realm. The company is a good one, far better than the generality of shows visiting this city "Zozo," the loved and living Queen, enlisted the admiration of the audience throughout, while the ludicrous antics of Knowall, Pat and Cupid, kept the people in constant good humor. The scenery and calcium effects presented were greatly superior in magnificence to anything before seen in this place, and especially the transformation of "Zozo's" Mirror Lake in the last act, over which the audience was wild with enthusiasm.—Chicago News Letter, Detroit Correspondent.

Matched Race.

A matched trotting race, mile heats, best three out of five, took place in the driving park on Friday afternoon between Black Diamond, owned by Wm. McCrae, of Beaverton, and Fanny B, owned by F. J. Daly, Peterborough. The stake was $200, a $100 a side. Messrs. J. Clancy, Harry Winch and M. McGreggor were the judges. Mr. Wm. Clancy kept the time. T. McEwan drove Black Diamond, while Ed. Brown held the silk over Fanny B. In the first heat Black Diamond broke frequently and galloped over a good deal of the track while Fanny trotted it. On coming in Fanny broke under the wire. The judges decided that it was a dead heat. The next heat was won by Fanny by about half a length. The next three heats were all three good exhibitions of trotting, Black Diamond winning by a very narrow distance. The time the respective heats were trotted in was as follows:—2.41¼, 2.40¾, 2.42¾, 2.40½, 2.43. There were about two hundred and fifty people present and a good deal of money changed hands on the result of both heats and the race.

Fresh arrivals at Turnbull's: Cream and Navy Sateen Prints, with Colored Polka Dots, the nicest goods in the market.

Jubilee Services.

At St. John's Church divine service will be held at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, June 21st, the day of the actual Queen's jubilee. There will be a special service as appointed by the Metropolitan of Canada. The offertory will be for the building fund of the Halifax cathedral in celebration of the centennary of the Colonial episcopate, Bishop Ingles, of Nova Scotia, consecrated in 1787, having been the first Colonial Bishop. All members of religious bodies who may have no services in their own places of worship are cordially invited to be present to join in prayer and thanksgiving on this occasion.

Carpet sweepers, curtains, window shades, curtain chains, in pictures a splendid line of steel engravings and artotypes, at A CLEGG'S. 2d142

Bishop Dowting at Lindsay.

We see by the Lindsay Post that the Bishop of Peterborough has been over to Lindsay, where he met with an enthusiastic reception. Addresses were presented to him by the congregation and the Y. M. C. L. A. His Lordship administered the rite of Confirmation to 130 persons. In the morning and evening the Bishop delivered very impressive discourses. He also visited the schools, and on Monday evening there was an entertainment at the Loretto Academy. Speeches were delivered by the Bishop, the Vicar-General, Father Keilty and others.

Durham Field Battery.

The Durham Field Battery will go to camp at Kingston on Tuesday morning. A drill of the right division will be held at the drill shed here on Monday night. All those having uniforms out are requested to return them immediately if not going to camp.

Fresh Dress Goods at Turnbull's selling at 12½ and 15 cents a yard, which means means less than manufacturer's prices, if bought earlier in the season. Turnbull's is the right house for cheap and stylish Dress Goods.

Ennismore Picnic.

Father Keilty intends holding his Picnic at Bridgenorth on July 1st. The object of the Picnic must commend itself to every body. The rev. gentleman is purchasing a large building at the Cross, which he intends fitting up as a reading room for his parishioners.

Ladies wanting first-class millinery at reduced prices will find it to their advantage to call at H. S. GRIFFIN & Co.'s. 2d142

Appreciated.

The Lindsay Post says:—On Saturday last the High School club went to Peterborough to play the return match with that club. The boys speak very highly of the manner they were entertained by the Peterborough club.

Accident.

A workman named Froude who was working at the alterations in Long's confectionery store on Friday, fell from a scaffold and was slightly injured. The wounds were looked after by Mr. J. McKee.

Runaway.

While a son and daughter of Mr. Thos. Powers, of Otonabee, were driving to town this morning the horse shied and bolted. The occupants of the buggy were thrown out and injured, but happily not seriously.

Follow the crowd to Kidd's for boots.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

The Daily Review.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, 1887.

1837-1887.

ON the eve of the day appointed for celebrating the Jubilee of the reign of Queen Victoria, the minds of our readers, as of her other subjects through her wide-spread Empire, will be filled with loyal and patriotic feelings towards our revered Sovereign. Never has monarch more generally won or more truly deserved a people's love, gratitude and esteem. As a constitutional sovereigh she has ever acted with a discretion and impartiality that left nothing to be desired, and as the head of a great Empire, the foremost personage of a great people, she has filled her exalted position with dignity and amidst the approval of all observers. In her personal character, as daughter, as wife, as mother, as woman, she has set an example not only to her own people but to the world, always using her vast influence for good. Well may the British people rejoice in the long reign of such a sovereign and hope that it may yet endure for many years.

But while celebrating the Jubilee of our Queen it is natural that our thoughts should also dwell upon the progress made during her reign by the nation. Indeed the Queen under our Constitution is especially identified with her people, and has been in more senses than one the true representative of the nation. Those among us who are advanced in years remember the state of things when Queen Victoria came to the throne and even those who are younger have heard from their parents of those bygone days. Looking back through the fifty years of Her Majesty's reign how marvellous appears the progress that has been made. At the time of the accession of Queen Victoria there were few railways even in England, there was hardly an ocean steamer, the electric telegraph was unknown and there were no photographs. And if these and other material improvements are most striking, the advance in other respects has been as rapid. The spread of religion, the increase of civilization, the diffusion of education, the extension of political and social rights, have all made gigantic strides. The great Empire to which we belong has grown in population, in extent, in wealth and power. And in no part of the Empire has this progress been more marked than in Canada. Instead of a vast, populous, flourishing and self-governing Dominion, such as the Provinces as then existed were disconnected, with scanty population, little wealth and hardly a germ of responsible government. Never in the history of the world has a community made such rapid progress as ours.

Well may we celebrate with rejoicing the Jubilee of our Sovereign, and give thanks for such a reign, and such progress as we have made under it.

THE REAL POINT.

THE advocates of commercial annexation to the United States say that there is nothing in the objection to taxing British goods while admitting United States goods free, because those who profess such loyalty have taxed British goods. This is a flagrant evasion of the point really at issue. The people of the Mother Country admit the justice of our legislating for ou own interests, and do not object so long as we serve them in the same manner as other people. But this is very different from our discriminating against Great Britain and in favour of a foreign country, treating our fellow-subjects as aliens and the people of a foreign land as our fellow-countrymen.

If we exact no duties on goods from the United States, we cannot exact them on goods from Great Britain without assuming an absolutely hostile position. Is this what the advocates of commercial annexation are aiming at?

Cricket.

A match was played between the Colborne and Peterborough clubs here on Saturday, the home team winning by 83 runs. Only six members turned up to do battle for Peterborough, so two of the juniors were impressed into the service, the captain with praiseworthy generalship resolving to trust to the chance of more members turning up in the afternoon. Strathey and Baker did turn up and stemmed the tide of defeat. Peterborough batted first and scored 63 for what were of them, Wilson, 27, and Hamilton, 10, being chief contributors. Colborne followed suit with 83, Boddy and Paterson both batting hard for their scores, but Sinclair's 19 was undoubtedly by far the best innings of the side. With their full team Peterborough scored 137. The Ray brothers played in great form for their scores, and as Hugh got 8 wickets for 32 runs in the match, it is a great pity he does not play oftener. Wilson and Hamilton again showed up well, and Long played an exceedingly patient innings for 14. At their second attempt Colborne managed only 34, the two old reliables proving too much for them The fielding of the Colbornes was excellent, the long-stopping especially so, while the bowling of J. Yeomans (9 wickets for 52 runs) speaks for itself, as does that of H. Ray, Baker and Strathy. Score:

Prizes.

Mr. R. H. Green offers half a dozen cabinet photographs, and Col. J. Z. Rogers a pair of paddles, as first and second prizes for the best illuminated canoe at the jubilee canoe parade.

Personal.

Mr. Jas. Dolan has returned to town after spending three months in the West. He visited the points of interest between here and San Francisco, and when at that city took a trip down the Pacific coast. Hearing that Peterborough was going to do wonders on Jubilee day he made post haste home to participate. He states that he made fine connections on the homeward trip.

TERRIBLE MINE EXPLOSION.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 18.—Shortly after the men employed in the Twin shaft at Pittston Junction had gone to wor kthis morning there was a violent explosion, which caused rock, coal and timber to shoot out of the shaft like a violent volcanic eruption. The house at the shaft was smashed into a thousand pieces. Five men were terribly injured, some, perhaps all of them, fatally. The victims are Patrick Barrett, Ed. Mooney, Bernard Dempsey, Michael Finors and Martin Donohoe, Barret and Mooney will die.

"For contemplation he, and valor formed, For softness she, and sweet attractive grace."

John Mil on in his "Paradise Lost" thus distinguishes woman from man. Diseases fall to her lot that do not to man's, peculiar to her soft and more refined nature.—A remedy adapted to the cure of her peculiar diseases is found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," for women. Thousands who have used it attest its great worth.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT

FIRST SESSION OF THE SIXTH CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

Ship Laborers—The North West Council—The Fisheries Protected—A Mare's Nest—The Indian Charges.

FRIDAY, June 17.—The writ was ordered for Digby, N. S.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to amend the law as to ship laborers. He could not agree to adopt Col. Amyot's measure, but he proposed to make some amendments that seemed to be required. They would make it penal to assault persons for having worked at unloading a vessel and the law was widened to include men engaged even if not on board. The law would be about the same as that in regard to workmen on building.

Mr. MITCHELL pronounced his approval

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec) said it would meet the object.

NORTHWEST COUNCIL.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD introduced a bill to defer the Northwest Council elections for another year. Next session he would introduce a bill to re-divide the constituencies and make other changes to meet the increase of population.

Mr. MITCHELL hoped the ballot would be introduced.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD had no objection in the present state of the country.

A MARE'S NEST.

Mr. LANDERKIN charged Sir John Macdonald with having corrupted Mr. M. T. O'Donohue's by promising compensation for his brother's losses in return for political assistance. His documents were a letter from Sir John saying Mr. O'Donoghue might call on him, and one from Mr. O'Donoghue saying Sir John had promised the compensation if he remained in power. He also made an attack upon Mr. McCarthy on account of what turned out to be a legal opinion on the claim written eight years ago.

THE IRON DUTIES.

Sir R. CARTWRIGHT called attention to the fact that the exemption from iron duties was known abroad before being passed, and said the inland merchants were placed at a disadvantage as regard those at the ports.

Mr. [illegible] said the applications for the exemption had no doubt led to the reports. The importers at the ports complained on the other hand that it was the merchants inland who had the advantage.

THE FISHERIES.

Mr. DAVIES, in Committee of Supply, complained that the fisheries were not efficiently protected.

Mr. FLYNN thought we had been too strict.

Sir R. CARTWRIGHT asked for information.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the papers showed that the Administration had firmly maintained our rights and that the Imperial Government had supported us. We insisted upon two main points. One was that our right extended for three miles measuring from the headlands, which was in accordance with United States practice and law. The other was than bait could not be purchased by fishing vessels, which could not become traders and then fishing vessels again as they pleased. He believed President Cleveland was favourable to enlarge commercial relations and our Government was endeavouring to foster that feeling.

Mr. MITCHELL approved of this, and said we should endeavor to avoid irritating seizures.

Mr. FOSTER said the coast was long and therefore difficult to protect, but the cruisers had instructions to do their utmost to keep foreign fishing vessels outside the three mile line.

INDIANS.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant,) called attention to the fact that there had not been a commission to enquire as to ill treatment of the North west Indians.

Sir J. MACDONAD said Mr. Cameron's charges were so transparently false as not to call for a commission. If any member next session would take the responsibility of moving for a commission he would consent.

SUPPLY

A number of items was passed in committee of supply.

THE SCOTT ACT.

Sir J. MACDONALD in reply to Mr. Mills said the Government would consider whether they would take up Mr. Jamieson Scott Act amendment bill.

PANIC IN A CIRCUS.

WELLSVILLE, Ohio, June 19.—During the evening performance of a circus at New Lisbon last night a panic which nearly resulted in much loss of life occurred. A baby elephant which was performing became unruly, and attacked one of the clowns, injuring him seriously. The trainer, who was coming into the ring with another elephant, hastened to the clown's assistance, when the larger animal also started on the rampage, causing a terrible stampede. The confusion for a time was terrible, men, women and children yelling and crowding for the entrance. Quiet was finally restored, when it was found that one young lady's leg had been broken and several women and children badly bruised. One of the lady equestriennes during the excitement fell in the midst of the four horses. She was riding and was terribly injured about the head and chest. Her condition is precarious.

Negro Terrorism.

AUGUSTA, Ga., June 18.—A special from Laurenz, S. C., reports that the negroes near there have formed a secret organization to demand a dollar a day for farm work and threaten murder if necessary to accomplish their ends. They are organized under the guise of Knights of Labour. An agitator named Hoover, who was recently shot near Warrenton, Ga., is the organizer. The whites have organized a cavalry company for protection.

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled. Dr. Thos. Prim, Ala., says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child eight months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

FRENCH ARMY BILL.

PARIS, July 19.—The French Chamber of Deputies yesterday passed the first clause of the Army bill, which declares it to be the duty of every Frenchman to perform military service, and the second, which provides that the duration of military service shall be twenty years.

PILGRIMS DROWNED.

VIENNA, July 19.—While a party of 250 pilgrims were crossing the Danube River, near Paks, the boat in which they were making the passage was capsized. Only a few of the party were saved. Over one hundred bodies have been recovered.

IRISH LEGISLATION.

LONDON, June 18.—A conference of Gladstonian and Parnellite members of Parliament was held last night, at which they definitely decided upon a course to be pursued in regard to the further discussion of Irish legislation. A section of the Parnellite members agreed to abandon their policy of violent protest to the wishes of their Gladstonian allies.

A SUPPOSED SPY.

PARIS, June 18.—A German was arrested at Saint Madard en Jalle, France, on suspicion of being a spy with the object of learning the secret of the manufacture of melinite.

THE HERAT MUTINY

LONDON, June 18.—Additional particulars of the revolt at Herat show that the mutineers consisted of half a Ghilzai regiment. they aimed to obtain possession of the arsenal and had nearly succeeded when they were overpowered. The remainder of the Ghilzais in the garrison at Herat comprise more than half of the whole garrison. They remained loyal and were among the foremost in putting down the rebellion of their brethren.

MILAN'S UNRULY SPOUSE.

VIENNA, June 18.—It is reported that King Milan of Servia, appointed M. Ristics premier in order to regain Russian influence, so as to counteract the intrigues of his wife to have him deposed. He will now it is said, sue for a divorce.

ELECTIONS IN HUNGARY.

PESTH, June 18.—The Government is confident of having a larger majority than before. Serious election riots are reported. in several places the Radicals set fire to the headquarters of the ministerial candidates.

FLOODS SUBSIDING.

VIENNA, June 19.—The floods in Hungary are subsiding. The towns of Mako and Vasarhely are now out of danger. If the present dry weather continues the water in the flooded district will be gone in six weeks. There is great distress among the inhabitants of the inundated regions, and there is danger of fevers arising from the decaying vegetable matter left by the floods. Fifteen hundred farmers are totally ruined, and the entire damage is estimated at $5,000,000.

BODYKE TENANTS SENTENCED.

DUBLIN, June 19.—Several of the tenants arrested at Bodyke for resisting the officers sent to evict them, have been sentenced to prison at hard labour for terms ranging from one to three months. After being sentenced they were taken to Ennis station under a heavy escort of police. Crowds of sympathizing people cheered the prisoners and became so demonstrative that the police charged and dispersed them. Several persons were severely injured.

CARDINAL MANNING'S EULOGY.

LONDON, June 19.—Cardinal Manning, in a letter to the clergy, says no sovereign in our long annals has been more beloved or has so won the love of the people as has her Majesty Queen Victoria. She has shown the heart not only of a Queen, but also of a mother to those who mourn. Her home and her court are bright and spotless examples for all who reign and a pattern for all her people. You will I am sure with joy offer our Heavenly Father thanksgiving prayers for Her Majesty in the jubilee of her just and happy reign.

THE JUBILEE IN NEW YORK.

An Immense Attendance at the Choral Services in Trinity Church.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Two flags, one of the United States and one of Great Britain, were trailed together on the vestibule of Trinity Church this afternoon, and during the hour between three and four o'clock several thousand persons passed into the church to attend the Jubilee choral services to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the accession of her Majesty Queen Victoria. Inside each person received a programme of the services printed in red, blue and gold, with the lion and unicorn of the British coat-of-arms emblazoned on the title page. Rev. Jos. W. Hill conducted the entire service. Rev. Dr. Dacosta read the first lesson, Rev. Mr. Turner the second, while Bishop Potter read the closing collect and said the benediction. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Morgan.

TROUBLES IN HONOLULU.

A Revolution Threatened—The King Barricaded in his Palace.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 17.—A missionary who has just arrived from Honolulu says, while the King has not been deposed, he thinks it is liable to occur soon. Both the Chinese and the white population are arming themselves and they demand a change of Government. The royal palace is barricaded and preparations are made for its defence in case of an attack. Other persons of authority are of the opinion that a revolution will surely occur, and foreigners residing there have gone so far as to call on their home Governments to send men-of-war for their protection. The extravagance and mismanagement of the kingdom have created a feeling of great dissatisfaction among the foreign residents As instances of the extravagance there it is stated that $40,000 was expended on the funeral of the King's sister, and $60,000 in fitting out a man-of-war, a tub of a steamer which had been purchased originally for $20,000. If the King is deposed, a Republic will probably be set up.

THE CAPTURED SOUTHERN FLAGS.

A Union General's Terrible Imprecations—A decision not yet Made.

NEW YORK, June 17.—"May God palsy the hand that wrote the order; may God palsy the brain that conceived it—and may God palsy the tongue that dictated it." The Grand Army of the Republic veterans heard these words with bated breath and glanced at each other with awe as these terrible sentences rang out from the bold General Fairchild, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, last night in Association Hall, in Harlem. The General told of the news received by telegraph that the President approved the return of the "Rebel" flags, and how these flags had been won by the veterans of the Grand Army of the Repnblic in open conflict with the enemies of the nation. The veterans had placed their tropies in the care of the War Department. They were intended, he said, to be kept in the archives of the nation as mementoes of won fields of battle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16.—The Confederate battle flags about which some Republican papers are making so great a disturbance, have not been returned to the Southern States yet, and they may never go. The President has made no order in the case, and really has not given the subject any consideration.

THE PARIS KIDNAPPING CASE.

A Cuban Heiress Abducted in the Streets of Paris.

PARIS, June 17.—The lady who was kidnapped here a few days ago is Mercedes Martinez Campos, a Cuban heiress, and a great beauty. She received a dowry of £300,000 on her marriage. The marriage was nullified, through the passage of the Naquet law, although she had sued for a divorce long before. She recovered part of her fortune, and resumed her maiden name. She lived quietly and elegantly with an elderly lady in the Rue Christophe Colombe. Both were walking in the Rue de Bulougne, when a party of men, two of whom were masked, seized the young lady, thrust her into a carriage and drove rapidly away unnoticed. Ten female accomplices in the meantime coarsely abused the lady's companion, Mlle. Louis, until the carriage was out of sight, when they slipped off. The household domestics have also disappeared, giving color to the conjecture that the lady herself was privy to the scheme, which had been concocted in order to force her family to give their consent to a love match. Being legally a spinster and a Spaniard, she will not be of age until she reaches her 22nd year. The Temps says the abductor of the Countess is a Frenchman, who had been assiduous in his attentions to the Countess and had vainly endeavored to persuade her to marry him.

BOBCAYGEON.

PROPOSED NEW BRIDGE.—The great chain of inland lakes which traverses this district, though it furnishes splendid navigation, is not entirely without disadvantages, for it prevents the establishment of direct roads north and south, and in some places localities are completely cut off from ordinary communication by road. The township of Harvey is situated in such a manner that the south portion can only obtain communication with the world by a most circuitous route, and to obviate this difficulty a movement has been made for the purpose of obtaining a bridge across the narrows between Harvey and Ennismore. The point proposed is between Lawson's Mill and Jacob's Island. The narrows are not more than a thousand feet wide, and the greatest depth of water twelve feet. Such a bridge would shorten the distance from points of Harvey to Peterborough by about eighteen miles. The blind channel behind Jacob's Island would be bridged and crossed by an interesting ratepayer, and the right of way across Jacob's Island would be free. The project is one which commends itself to the common sense of every person acquainted with the locality and the memorial to the County Council of Peterborough asking for aid, which has been taken around by Mr. T. H. Crowley, has been signed by nearly everyone in the neighborhood. The bridge proposed is a pier bridge, with piers 33 feet apart, and a 12 foot causeway of 2 in. lumber on cedar stringers. The cost would be moderate, and the benefits to a very extensive district great. It is to be hoped the movement will be successful, and that the County Council may grant the required aid.—Independent.

Prussia's Great Canal.

The North Sea and Baltic Canal is an undertaking of some magnitude, and will, no doubt, be a great advantage to Germany, not only from a military, but a commercial, point of view. It is to be a ship canal, and, as its name indicates, it is to connect the North Sea with the Baltic. It is estimated that it will shorten the route between the Baltic and the greater number of British ports some 237 nautical miles. This will be a saving to sailing vessels of about three days, and to steamers of twenty-two hours. It will, too, lessen quite materially the chances of disaster. The length of the canal is 61 miles; its breadth is to be 196 feet 10½ inches at the level of the water, and 85 feet 3½ inches at the bottom; it will have a uniform depth of 27 feet 10 inches. It is sufficiently broad, with ordinary care, to admit of two large vessels passing each other, and it is deep enough to float the largest of the German war ships. The first stone of this canal was, with considerable ceremony, laid by the Emperor of Germany himself on the 29th of last month. The work will not be really commenced until the autumn. Its estimated cost is about $39,000,000. The Reichstag contributes two-thirds of the cost and the Kingdom of Prussia out of its own resources is to give the remaining third. It is expected that the canal will be completed in about six years. They hasten slowly in the Old World.—Montreal Witness.

GINGER-BEER, OF A SUPERIOR KIND, FOR KEEPING.—Take four pounds of loaf-sugar, four ounces or more of bruised white ginger, and four gallons of water. Boil for a half hour, and skim this. Slice two lemons or more into a tub, and put to them 1 ounce of cream of tartar. Pour the hot liquor over this, and when about 70 deg., add a half pint, or rather less, of fresh beer-yeast. Let this work for three or four days. Strain it off clear from the lees into a cask, and add to it, if it is to be kept, a half-pint of brandy. Bottle in a week or 10 days, and wire the corks.—Obs. With four times the quantity of cream of tartar this make aerated ginger-beer.

RED COATS IN CHURCH.

PARADE ON SUNDAY MORNING BY THE CITY BATTALION.

The Sermon Preached by the Rev. I. Tovell—Glowing Tribute to the Queen—Greatness of the Victorian Age.

On Sunday morning the 57th Battalion held church parade, attending the George street Methodist church. The Battalion marched up George street at 11 o'clock headed by the band playing the National Anthem. The central row of pews was reserved for the visitors. After prayer and singing the Rev. Mr. Tovell took his text from 1 Peter II, 17—"Honor the King," and spoke as follows:—

Christianity inculcates patriotism. Caesar had his rights. Earthly potentates acting under constitutional authority should receive the homage due to them. The country in which we live, and probably where we were born, should be dear to our hearts. These things are sanctioned and commended and illustrated in the Bible by thrilling examples:—The patriot prophet Moses, how he bore the Hebrew people in his heart! The illustrious Joshua, how he sharpened his sword on the tables of stone, and opened a pathway through an idolatrous land for the colonization of a worthier race! Samuel, the Statesmen, and David who for the glory of his nation wielded the hero's sword and tuned the poet's harp, are among the most eminent of examples. What a privilege to be capable of imitating these men, and to feel the stirrings of patriotic emotions such as theirs, even to feel a nation's life in our veins, to rejoice in a nation's glory, to suffer for a nation's momentary shame, and to throb with a nation's hope. There is something princely in that soul, alive and sensible to the history, the honor and future of its country. While on the other hand he who is dead to these things ought not to be rated as a man. Does such a man live under the sheltering folds of the British flag who is insensible to the valor of our soldiers, to the ability of our orators, to the wisdom of our philosophers, to the merit of our artists, to the plodding power of our workingmen, and not only insensible to these things, but who has no pride in the privileges of an Empire whose resources are equal to all his necessities? Or

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own my native land,
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering on a foreign strand?
If such there be, go mark him well,
For him no minstrel raptures swell.
High though his title, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish could claim,
Despite those titles, power and pelf,
The wretch, concentred all in self,
Living shall forfeit fair renown,
And doubly dying shall go down
To the vile dust from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonored and unsung."

Our text calls for patriotism. "Honor the King." And this leads me to dwell on the circumstances engaging the mind and heart of the nation at this time. A state of feeling exists to-day throughout the British Empire that is cause for inexpressible gratitude. We are not clamouring for the Queen to abdicate her throne—a throne at once majestic and historic, but the hosts of Christian subjects are on the leading up to the King of Kings, asking Him to bless the land and save the Queen. We are not groaning to-day under a despotism and degradation of power such as our forefathers suffered when the Stuarts held the reins of Government; neither are we in the midst of an age when a revolutionary spirit cries for the destruction of one of the best forms of government known to man, be he subject or sovereign, statesman or king. But we are in the enjoyment of peace and comfort and contentment as a nation, and are ready to give utterance to our feelings of gratitude and admiration for the long and benignant and noble reign of our gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria. Fifty years ago, when the first flush of young womanhood was upon her, on the 20th June, at half-past two in the morning, she was awakened from her refreshing slumbers to be told of her destiny. And on the next day she was proclaimed Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. The nation's sorrow at the death of King William was soon hushed by the sweet music that fell from the nation's harp of hope as Victoria ascended the throne. No one had ever occupied that throne who better appreciated the spirit and genius of the British constitution. And, moreover, her widowed mother had taught her the way of faith, so that she was free to lean upon God for wisdom in her high position. Three years after her coronation, Prince Albert, Prince of Saxe-Cobourg Gotha, became her devoted husband, an affectionate father, and an earnest believer in truth of our holy Christianity. Seldom has a more pathetic scene been witnessed than when, 21 years after her bridal day, she, with her four sons and five daughters, bade adieu at the death bed to her honored husband. Her sorrow was unutterable at the parting, and doubtless accounts in part for that tenderness of heart she has so often shown towards others when the dark cloud of bereavement has gathered about their homes. The fifty years of her reign makes a chapter in English history of absorbing interest to us now living, and the generations yet unborn will trace the events recorded with an interest keener than that which the most fascinating work of fiction may create. We cannot stay to enumerate in detail those events. When she began to reign no Jew nor member of the Roman Catholic Church was eligible to a place in the Imperial Parliament.

ALTAR STAIRS OF PRAYER

A BROADER AND BETTER SPIRIT

with corresponding privileges now obtains. Fifty years ago the universities of Great Britain were closed against the sons of dissenters and Non-Conformists. To-day they throng those famous halls and seminaries of learning and grace the various walks of life. The establishment of the penny postage system, the abolition of the corntax, giving boundless satisfaction to the poor, the forbidding of women to work in the coal mines, and the lessening of the kinds of crimes punishable by death, are among some of the blessings that has fallen like genial showers on the parched fields of English society within the reign of our beloved Queen. What a chapter of changes in the personnel of the distinguished persons of the Empire during the last half century! Lord Melbourne who did so much to instruct the youthful Queen in political economy passed away to his rest when the Queen felt loathe to lose him. The Duke of Wellington, of imperishable memory, so familiar to royalty, and so well known in Parliament halls, now sleeps among the honored dead in Westminster. Richard Cobden, never to be forgotten, because of his struggles to abolish the corn-laws, went to his reward years ago. D'Israeli, the subtle and versatile and eminent statesman is no more. Peel and Palmerston, of brilliant reputation; Macauley, the most fascinating historian of his age; Carlisle, the essayist, terse, strong, sarcastic, prophetic and fearless; John Stuart Mills, able in politics, letters, and logic; Mrs. Somerville, eminent in the realms of science; Harriet Martineau, an authoress of considerable merit; Charles Dickens, in the empire of fiction wielding wide dominion; Florence Nightingale, a familiar name in every British home, these and many others, stars of varying but brilliant lustre, have appeared and disappeared on the sky of this century, and during the reign of Queen Victoria. Then also the pulpit how changed. Dr. Norman McLeod, beloved by the royal family, of the Presbyterian Church, and Chaplain to the Queen; Dean Stanley, broad in spirit, eminent in scholarship, a classic writer, and endeared to the royal family also; Dr. Punshon, of peerless gifts as a preacher; Dr. Guthrie, eloquent, earnest and philanthropic; Dr. Chalmers, commanding and aggressive; F. W. Robertson, of luminous intelligence, unrivalled in the pulpit, a thinker of great power and insight, all these since Victoria came to the throne have changed the mortal for the immortal, the temporal for the eternal. They served their day and generation by the will of God, they laboured for the good of the nation, and we have entered into their labors. How striking the special providences that seem to have attended our honored sovereign! Protected against the swift arrows of death of so many years! Surely Heaven has heard and answered prayer expressed in the National Anthem. "God save the Queen, Long may she reign" have risen from the nation's heart to the throne of the eternal. What are we that God has been so mineful of us! Since 1837 Russia has buried [illegible] France has interred Napoleon, Prussia has parted with two Sovereigns. And the United States has wept, and all nations felt their sorrows, over the death of Abram Lincoln, Ulysses Grant and James A. Garfield, a trinity of Presidents whose names will be deservedly remembered for centuries to come.

BUT VICTORIA HAS LIVED;

God has been her refuge. She has lived to do her part in sweetening national sorrows and in dissolving national animosities; she has lived to send many a heartfelt message of sympathy to bereft widows of Presidents and Princes, Emperors and Kings; she has lived to foster such principles that during her long reign England has subdued her old burning passion for war and bloodshed; she has lived to give effect to legislation helpful to the poor men and stimulating to the spirit of enterprise and industry among all her people; she has lived to endear herself to the civilized nations of the earth. Her gentleness has made her great. The queenly virtues of 1837 are still hers, richer and riper, with fifty years' experience, thus making her throne a praise and a glory amid the thrones of the world's great nations. In this may we not see the mighty hand of God? In English history this will be called the Victorian Age, and as such the pages that may chronicle the facts must ever be studied with great interest. What deep and significant currents of religious thought are traceable in this period! What wonderful discoveries in science have been made, and how marvellous the application of those discoveries in the various departments of social, intellectual and commercial life! How prophetic the tendencies in the ecclesiastical domains! The Church of England loosening its hold on the State, and at the same time all the churches putting forth greater efforts than in the past to quicken the energies and purify the life of the State with the spirit of truth. And another tendency is the organic unity of the branches of Protestantism. In the empire of scientific and religious speculations, what prominence is given to the settlement of man's origin; what interest is manifested in the propositions of agnosticism, and how persistent the zeal of the disciples of the rationalistic belief! Then, also, it will be a period marked by prodigious evangelistic efforts, by abounding liberality in support of missionary enterprises, by the upspringing of benevolent institutions for the benefit of the poor and for the comfort of the infirm; by a widespread and determined resistance to the evils of intemperance and social impurities; and by a revision of the Scriptures whose teachings are given for the liberation and ennoblement of the spirit of man, and for the uplifting of the nations. Associated with the temperance reform will be the names of Canons, Farrar and Wilberforce, fervid and forceful in Evangelistic work the names of Garrett, Booth and Moody will appear prominent among the faithful. With aggressive pastoral and pulpit labors for the salvation of the people, Charles Spurgeon will stand a Saul among the prophets; with the spread of scientific culture Tyndall the physicist and Huxley the Naturalist, and Spencer the Psychologist will rank among the foremost. Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Alfred Tennyson are names whose luster will not perish from the firmament of poetic life. While in political life Wm. E. Gladstone and his illustrious but lamented rival D'Israeli, will make statesmanship a praise in this Victorian Age, to which must be added grand military heroes whose deeds of valor and glorious achievements will be carved in stone and sung in poetry, and transferred to canvass and stored in history for future inspiration to men engaged on similar battlefields. The name of Havelock touches a cord of sympathy and admiration

IN EVERY PATRIOTIC HEART,

and equal with him in bravery and high enthusiasm was General Gordon whose death the nation has deeply deplored. And coming nearer home we shall be slow to forget the hardships endured and courage displayed by our own brave sons in the bleak and widely spreading prairies to suppress the recent rebellion in the great Northwest. These as some of the currents and characters that mark the times in which we live, and will be found among the records in years to come as some of the elements that constitute the Victorian Age. It bewilders me to think of the extent of the Empire over which Victoria reigns. Surely the Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad. Her queenly power is felt in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales; The Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland and the West Indies take pleasure in her authority; Heligoland, Gibraltar and Malta, and many other islands of the sea are among her possesions; India, Australia and numerous islands and peninsulas of Asia and Africa swell the area till 8,000,000 of acres trembling with the tread of 300,000,000 souls make up the empire over which she presides. Imagine the the chief personage of such an Empire rising to her feet with modesty and grace, and lifting a copy of the Holy Scriptures up, and says to a pagan visitor, "This book is a secret of the unity and glory of this vast Kingdom." Let angels strengthen that hand that lifted that holy volume, and let her heart grow purer and truer tenderer day by day through the blessed influences of that word she so faithfully honored. Would to God that her noble testimony was repeated by all her intelligent subjects! Would that unhappy Ireland knew more of the saving and sanctifying influences of the Gospel of Christ, and less of religious hatred and social jealousies, and exhausting tithes and intoxicating beverages. Would that the churches were more zealous in the spread of this Gospel, and less interested in ritual and ceremony and relative supremacy—then would Zion stand forth the perfection of beauty, and all nations would flow unto her. Would that every soldier were a Havelock in faith, every statesman a Daniel Webster in his spiritual leanings, every plowman an Elisha in obedience to the behests of the everlasting Word, every mother a Victoria in her reverend appreciation of the inspired Book, and every minister in holy orders an apostle of righteousness, seeking with burning zeal and tireless energy the salvation of men. Only by righteousness can the nation be exalted. Given these characteristics, and the glory of the Empire will spread till the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of God. What grave responsibilities lie at the door of the religious people of this land! Nearly one-sixth of the population under the fostering care of the British Government, and with a Christian Queen on the throne to encourage every good work! It is to be deplored that in many instances the officials of the government in lands especially remote from the centre of the Empire, are unmindful of the higher moral influence they should wield. But with a Christian Queen to encourage moral efforts, should not the Christian people of this great kingdom do all that lieth in their power to leaven the nation with Gospel truth? Ought not her latent energies all be aroused to seek and to save the lost? With the wealth now at her doors why should not the Bible be placed in every home, and prayer be offered at every hearthstone? Is not this the church's mission, and is not this the hope of the nation? Is socialism becoming a perilous force in these days? Let me remind you that legislation nor secular education is [illegible] WILL DISSOLVE BEFORE THE BURNING RAYS of a loving Christian life. This Jubilee will best be celebrated by the followers of Christ if we afresh kindle our devotion to the higher interests of men at the altar sprinkled with the blood of atonement. "Kindled in some hearts it is. Oh that all might catch the flame, All partake the glorious bliss." Queen Victoria is beloved. Beloved because she is a true woman. Beloved because as wife and widow her life has been above reproach. Beloved because never once has she forgotten to govern in the interest of the people. To-day the churches are praying the King of Kings to bless her. Hymns and anthems full of praise to God are filling the temples because of her long and mild and beneficent reign. The nation is at her feet not as serfs and slaves but as free men and full of conscious power, and there to pledge themselves in terms of loyalty to her sceptre so long as Heaven shall spare her life. How beautiful the fact. The devotion is just and true and scriptural. If an enemy should threaten her humiliation a million sheathed swords would leap from their concealment in her defence. In keeping with the divine command we honor our sovereign, and are subject to the power she wields. For half a century she has lived enthroned in the nations loyal heart. Wisdom has been her counsellor, God has been her helper. Next Tuesday the 21st of June 1887, she will have completed her 50th year as Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. The nation is eagerly waiting to pour forth a volume of congratulations. Those congratulations will be uttered in thrilling songs and elegent addresses, in processions and demonstrations without number. Graceful arches, streaming flags, brilliant illuminations, joy bells ringing, resounding drums, and cannons roaring—these will be the syllables with which the nation will speak out its gladness. On Scotlands hills historic, o'er England's undulating plains, amid the mountain glory of Wales, in Dublin's cultivated parks, on Gibralter's rock-ribbed heights, and in every colony of the Empire the "red, white and blue" will be seen, proudly floating in the breeze, symbol of the people joy and glory. The nations will not be hung on Tuesday next on the weeping willows, but lying in the lap of peace and contentment, the sunlight of love falling on its sensitive strings, its chords swept by the summer of good-will, it will pour fourth o'er land and sea strains of music, triumphant and thrilling, making every shore resound with sentiments of love for British laws, and British liberties, and British institutions, and a British Queen. And why so? Because Victoria's throne has been established and maintained in integrity and righteousness; because the royal place has been preserved in purity and sweetness; because the royal hands have liberally measured out to the poor and needy of her abundance; because the bigotry of King James has been superseded by a spirit of toleration that gives liberty to every man to worship as his conscience may dictate; because the dark deeds of Bloody Mary have been made to look blacker still by the kindly sympathies, generous impulses, and catholic spirit of our present Sovereign. Hence the nation will forget its political strifes, and society its social differences, and churches their ecclesiastical contentions, and tribes their tribal jealousies, and with will magnify the wisdom and the goodness of God to us in the establishment of such a throne. For a moment let us turn from this glad scene to one of greater glory. Earthly potentates must die and human glory fade as a leaf.

"And what is Fame?—the meanest have their day,
The greatest can but blaze, and pass away."

"The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armour against fate,
Death lays his icy hand on kings.
Sceptre and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade."

Is there then no life everlasting, no crown unfading, no inheritance incorruptible? Is there no king eternal, and no kingdom an everlasting one? Is there an "unseen" superior to the "seen," and an "eternal" that shall supersede the "temporal?" When this earthly house dissolves, is there a habitation eternal in the Heavens? Revelation declares there is. "If it were not so I would have told you." Jesus is the King eternal. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. Death will not turn His brow to marble, nor rob His arm of its omnipotence. O, ye people, let this King of Glory in! Young men, clad in military suits and trained in military art, and proud of the flag that for a 1,000 years has braved the battle and the breeze, I summon you to a warfare against principalities of evil, and to a militant life to be crowned with immortality. Our King, the Saviour, calls for your services. Have you enrolled yourselves as soldiers of Christ? If not, why not? And why not to-day? No loftier service awaits you. No life more hopeful than this, to be a follower of Christ. Here you will find scope for the highest enthusiasm, and calls for the display of moral chivalry the most practical. Clad in spiritual armor, the sword of the spirit in your hand, the helmet of salvation on your brow, the girdle of truth about your loins, you shall overcome the kingdoms of unbelief and sin. Will you not enlist? Volunteers are called for, enter and enroll your names as servants of a Great King the soldiers of an invincible commander. Fight the good fight of faith. Bring your own thoughts into subjection to the will Divine, and when the Jubilee year of the King eternal shall visit the nations, you shall share in its superlative joys, immortality shall be your crown, glory divine your diadem, and victory over sin your everlasting palm.

And to God the everlasting be glory and might and dominion and power forever and ever, Amen.

During the service a Jubilee Anthem composed by Coward, was sung, Mrs. Daly taking the solo in a pleasing manner.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

Under the Gaslight

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45

Ladies' and children's parasols cheap, an extensive range to select from at Turnbull's.

Subscriptions.

The following subscriptions have been added to the Jubilee celebration fund;—

R. A. Morrow	$ 5 00
Geo. A. Cox	5 00
Ashburnham Council	30 00

Ladies wanting first-class millinery at reduced prices will find it to their advantage to call at H. S. GRIFFIN & Co.'s. 2d142

Horned Toad.

Mr. A. Elliott has sent Mr. M. Tierney a pair of horned toads which he obtained at Gilroy Hot Springs, near San Francisco. The western inhabitants stood the trip well and appear to be in good health. Mr. Tierney says that they will form a feature in Elliott & Tierney Jubilee decorations.

St. Paul's Choir.

The St. Paul's Church choir is growing in proficiency as well as numbers. On Sunday evening there were twenty-five in the choir. The anthem "I Will Call" was sung with perfectness not often equalled, and not surpassed even by professional choristers. Mr. Parker has a right to be proud of his choir.

The Peterborough Rangers.

The Canada Gazette contains the following announcement:—"57th Battalion 'Peterborough Rangers'—Surgeon Robert Kincaid to have the rank of Surgeon-Major, from 7th June, 1887.

County Council.

The Council of the County of Peterborough will meet pro forma to-morrow morning and will forthwith adjourn till the following day for the transaction of business. This sudden announcement will surprise our readers the Council through cheeseparing and mistaken economy having discontinued the established practice of advertising, so that persons having claims against them or business to transact with them have had no information to guide them as to the time of meeting.

Jubilee Services.

At St. John's Church divine service will be held at 9 o'clock on Tuesday, June 21st, the day of the celebration of Her Majesty's jubilee. There will be a special service as appointed by the Metropolitan of Canada. The offertory will be for the building fund of the Halifax cathedral in celebration of the centennary of the Colonial episcopate, Bishop Inglis, of Nova Scotia, consecrated in 1787, having been the first Colonial Bishop. All members of religious bodies who may have no services in their own places of worship are cordially invited to be present to join in prayer and thanksgiving on this occasion.

Fresh patterns in Carpets just arrived at Turnbull's, intending purchasers should see them, they are special value.

SPECIAL—Every member of the General Jubilee Committee is requested to be at the Fire Hall this evening at 8.30 o'clock sharp, to complete arrangements for to-morrow.

Follow the crowd to Kidd's for boots.

POLICE COURT.

VAGRANCY.

SATURDAY, June 18.—Wm. Sweeney and Thos. Fitzsimmons were found by P. C.'s McGinty and Pidgeon sleeping near the Romaine brick works on Friday night. The sleepers were awakened from their slumbers to finish their sleep in the cells. This morning they appeared to have slept well. A charge of vagrancy was preferred against them, to which they replied that they were laborers on the Burleigh works.

HIS WORSHIP tried his hand at mind reading. Said he: You worked there, were paid off, come to town, got on a spree, and wandered in there and had a sleep.

PRISONERS—Yes, sir.

The Magistrate let them go, cautioning them to take care of themselves in the future.

SENTENCED.

Jas. Barry was sentenced to an indefinite term in the Penetanguishene Reformatory yesterday morning.

Fresh arrivals at Turnbull's: Cream and Navy Sateen Prints, with Colored Polka Dots, the nicest goods in the market.

St. John's Church.

On Sunday the Rector, the Rev. J. W. R. Beck, gave notice that in accordance with the directions of the Metropolitan of Canada and of the Bishop of this Diocese, there would be divine service on Tuesday, June 21st, the day appointed for the celebration of the Queen's jubilee, the proclamation of the Governor-General also containing the request that there would be service in every place of worship throughout the Dominion. The hour would be nine o'clock a. m. (not 11 o'clock as he had at first intended) and it would be a short service prepared for the occasion by the Metropolitan. Such a thanksgiving service was certainly the proper way to acknowledge the blessings vouchsafed to us during the last half century, under the rule of our beloved Sovereign. In Toronto, when attending the Synod, he found that not only Churchmen, but also the Methodists, were making preparations for services worthy of the occasion. There had been a great omission in the programme arranged for the jubilee celebration in Peterborough, which had no provision for thanksgiving services, and this should even yet be rectified. There was also another anniversay of special interests to Canada to be observed this year, the centenary of the Colonial episcopate, Bishop Inglis having been consecrated on August 12th, 1787, Bishop of Nova Scotia, the first Bishop for a British colony. It was intended to erect a Cathedral at Halifax as a memorial, and the offertory on Tuesday would be devoted to this fund. He asked his congregation to support the authorities of the Church and of the State in their desire that the Jubilee of the Queen should be fitly observed by thanksgiving, and he hoped they would individually use their influence to bring others to the service at St. John's Church, to which all, to whatever Christian body they might belong, were invited. The church was handsomely decorated. On each side of the chancel arch were displayed the white ensign of the British Empire, and the flag of the Dominion of Canada, while the walls of the chancel and aisles were similarly adorned. On the re-table were flowering plants and bouquets and on the sills of the chancel window were floral decorations, that in the centre being an imperial crown. On a white dossal were the crown and V. R. with the words "DEUS REGINAM SERVATE." For the hymns had been selected appropriate songs of thanksgiving.

Fresh Dress Goods at Turnbull's selling at 12½ and 15 cents a yard, which means means less than manufacturer's prices, if bought earlier in the season. Turnbull's is he right house for cheap and stylish Dress Goods.

Jubilee Services.

In the churches on Sunday references were made to the Jubilee year.

At St. Peter's Cathedral His Lordship the Bishop spoke at the 7 o'clock service, at the close of the sermon, of the greatness of the Empire, the homage due to the Queen, and the loyalty which was now being manifested.

At St. Andrew's Church at the morning service the Rev. Mr. Bell addressed himself to the congregation at the close of the sermon, speaking of Victoria's glorious reign, and the thanks due to God for fifty years of prosperity.

In the evening at St. Paul's the Rev. Mr. Torrance spoke of the honor due to Queen Victoria, how she should be honored, and how the people might honor her.

The Rev. F. H. Wallace preached a Jubilee sermon in the Charlotte-Street Church in the morning and one in the George Street Church in the evening.

At St. Luke's, Ashburnham, the Rev. W. C. Bradshaw also preached two Jubilee sermons

In the Baptist Church a children's service was held in the morning in honor of the Jubilee. The church was decorated with flowers, and the service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. McKay, of Toronto.

The sermon preached by the Rev. I. Tovell to the volunteers will be found in another column.

At 7.30 this evening a praise and thanksgiving service will be held in St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, in commemoration of the Jubilee of Her Majesty's reign. This evening has been fixed for the service so as not to interfere with the local celebration. Members of the congregation and citizens generally are requested to attend. Offertory for the mission fund.

JUBILEE.

Notes About To-Morrow's Great Celebration—Preparations.

His Worship the Mayor issued a proclamation this morning declaring to-morrow to be a holiday, and requesting all citizens to suspend business and join in the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee.

A meeting of the celebration committee will be held this evening at the Fire Hall to complete all arrangements.

The decorations and illuminations promise to be on a grand scale. The Sons of England arch is up. The gas arch is in readiness. Both of the Lodges of Oddfellows are putting up their's on George street. The Orangemen are putting up an arch at the corner of George and Simcoe streets. Private citizens are joining in the celebration with zest. Some of the merchants are ready for the day now. One of the most unique illuminations will be that at Mr. R. W. Muncaster's jewelry store. The Prince of Wales' feather will appear in gas jets above the front of the store, surrounded by mottos. Mr. R. Fair, of the Golden Lion, will have a bust of Queen Victoria robed in royal garments. Three gas jets, representing England, Ireland and Scotland, will blaze above her head. Mr. H. LeBrun, of the City Clothing Store, will have the golden horse shoe and the whole front of the building illuminated. The citizens are all preparing to decorate.

The electric light tower in the Gardens is a company affair. The Horticultural Society furnished the tower and the Electric Light Co., the lamps. There are ten lamps on it. The Electric Light Co. are putting up a tower on their own account on the corner of George, and Hunter streets, upon which there are seven lamps.

To-morrow promises to be a gala day in Peterborough.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our, stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

At Cost and Under.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

FIFTY YEARS. QUEEN!

Long May Victoria Reign Over the Empire.

PETERBORO'S CELEBRATION

OF THE JUBILEE OF HER MAJESTY'S ACCESSION.

The Day's Programme—Address to the Queen—Children Singing—Sports and Pastimes—Jubilee Picnic—"God Save the Queen."

On Tuesday the people of Peterborough in accordance with the proclamations issued, celebrated the Jubilee of Queen Victoria's accession to the throne of the British Empire.

THE DECORATIONS.

The preparations made were a credit alike to the honored and the honoring. On the opening of the morning thousands of flags and banners fluttered in the breeze over the fair town. Never did Peterborough appear in such a garb as that which dressed her on June 21st. On the churches and public buildings waved Union Jacks, nearly every private residence was decorated in some way, while the business part of the town, especially from the post office to the market square, was almost hidden in the profuse garniture. To describe the decorations in detail would be a toilsome contract. It is sufficient to say that decorating on this day was the rule, not the exception. Nevertheless some of the chief of the demonstrations of loyalty in this particular way may appropriately be commented on. Amid the mass of gay colors which filled the gorge between the buildings lining George street, from Brock street to Charlotte street, arose green arches at half block distances. The first of these was located from the Cox buildings across to the Examiner office. It was put up by the Mount Hebron Encampment, was made of palm bushes and bore the following: "I. O. O. F., No. 111, Mount Hebron Encampment, V. R." Three large links held in their centres the letters "F. L. T.," and below these were three smaller links in flowers. A short distance down street the Gas Company's arch stood, a plain bow surmounted by a crown, the letters V. R. and the figures 50. The next arch was a magnificent one—the finest perhaps that ever spanned the street. It was erected by the Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England. Its huge bulk was surmounted with a crown and the letters S. O. E. On one side the words "Long Live Our Noble Queen" peeped from the green boughs, and on each side stood 1837-1887, and on the other side were the words, "God Save Our Queen." On the columns springing from the ground indentures were filled with the letters "V.R." and "S. O. E." Panels stretching from the arch to the buildings on each side spelled the following words, "Charity, Loyalty, Purity, Fidelity." The Orangemen's arch was situated at the corner of Simcoe and George streets. It was a double arch, a tall staff in the centre catching up evergreen festoons from the four columns. Connecting each of the latter were mottoes, "Queen and Constitution," "Long Live the Queen" "God Save the Queen" and "Fifty Years Queen." At the corner of the market square the Court Peterborough Foresters erected a fine arch of evergreens, upon which real beavers, antelopes, deer heads and other emblems of forestry appeared. The mottoes on it were: "True in the Past, we Trust you in the Future," "Liberty, Benevolence and Concord," a crown and the letters "V. R." formed the terminal. At the corner of Aylmer and Charlotte streets, from Porter Bros. carriage factory to the Queen's Hotel another evergreen arch appeared on which wree the follow mottoes: "Fifty Years Our Queen." "God Save the Queen." The Otonabee Lodge of Oddfellows hung out a beautiful banner across George street from their hall. On it was painted by the deft hand of Mr. R. M. Roy, the three links, the all seeing eye, the bundle of sticks, V. R., and the Bible The banner was flanked on either side by a British ensign.

PROCESSION AND ADDRESS.

The first event on the programme was the choral singing by the children. At ten o'clock more than fifteen hundred little ones were marshalled into order at the Charlotte street rink. Following the banner upon which was "The Future Hope of Our Nation" they marched up street. At Simcoe street the firemen, with the hose and hook and ladder waggon gorgeously decked with flowers, joined the children and marched after them. The streets were crowded with people and all waited for the return of the procession, which was to issue from the drill shed. Unfortunately just at this time the rain commenced to fall and the shower lasted for about an hour and a half. It was impossible for the procession to perform its part of the programme. The committee decided to have the singing take place in the drill shed and this decision was acted upon. Before entering upon the songs of celebration the Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, Chairman of the Celebration Committee, read the following address, which will be sent to the Queen:—

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,—We, the loyal inhabitants of the town and county of Peterborough, in the Province of Ontario and Dominion of Canada, assembled on this 21st day of June, 1887, in enthusiastic commemoration of the Jubilee year of Your Majesty's reign, beg to offer our most heartfelt congratulations upon the auspiciously happy completion of the fiftieth year of your gracious reign.

Among the many colonies and dependencies which comprise the vast area of your realm you will find none who cherish British connection more fondly, nor more highly appreciate the blessings arising from that connection, as the result of your wise and gracious sovereignty, then the inhabitants of this town and district. From the very beginning of Your Majesty's reign, whose opening days were signalized by the conferring upon Canada of the important gift of self-government, we have, by virtue of that gift and by virtue of Imperial respect for our rights and interest in our welfare, flourished and advanced until what was fifty years since a scattered stretch of isolated colonies, has become a consolidated Dominion, stretching across a mighty continent from ocean to ocean, and containing within itself all the elements of a great and prosperous nation. With other parts of the Dominion, the town of Peterborough, which is now aglow with enthusiasm in honor of Your Majesty's Jubilee year, has shared to a very large extent the progress and prosperity of the past half century. A hamlet of modest huts has become a thriving, well built town, with a healthy commercial life, possessing all the advantages of modern civilization and enjoying its full share of the numerous blessings which the Empire enjoys under your benign sway.

As an integral part of the great British Empire, fully conscious to what extent its unity is maintained, and by the sentiments of love and devotion which centre in Your Gracious Majesty, we pray that you may long be spared to rule happily and peacefully over the many millions who acknowledge your benign sovereignty, and we trust that Canada's connection with the Mother Country may be maintained throughout all future generations.

The address will be signed by Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, chairman, and C. H. Allison, secretary.

THE SPORTS.

The Chairman moved the adoption of the address in a few appropriate remarks. The motion was seconded by Mr Jas. Stevenson, Mayor, who also spoke a few words. Short speeches followed from the Rev. Mr. Wallace, the Rev. Mr. Torrance, the Rev. Mr. Bell, the Rev. Mr. Wilson and Mr. J. R. Stratton, M. P. P.

The address was adopted amid huzzas and the band played "God Save the Queen."

The children then sang the Jubilee choruses in a very effective manner, after which lemonade and cake were served out.

A procession of volunteers and firemen was formed and a march was made to the Court House, in the front of which a feu de joie was fired, "God Save the Queen" was played, and three cheers for the Queen given. This ended the morning programme.

The programme announced that sports would take place in the Riverside Park in the afternoon, and thither, between one and two o'clock, about two thousand people wended. The eastern grand stand was crowded, so much so that it went down with a crash about half past two. There was much scrambling and screeching, but fortunately none was hurt. The rain again intervened at this point to spoil the fun. It grew to be such a heavy shower that the people were driven from the park and the afternoon's sport was effectually stopped.

ST. PETER'S PICNIC.

In the Murray street school grounds a very successful picnic was held under the auspices of St Peter's Cathedral congregation. The grounds were dotted with tents and tables, these lined with purchasing people, looked very pretty. The ladies provided sumptuous repasts both at noon and in the evening, and they had the satisfaction of seeing them duly appreciated by the people. during the afternoon the most exciting event was the drawing of the gold watch presented for competition by the late Bishop Jamot last year. It was won by Miss Maggie McFadden, the amount realized by it being $616.00. The sports were under the superintendence of Messrs. J. J. Sheehy, J D. McIlmoyle, Judges, and Dr. Brennan, starter. The list of the names of those who won at the various events is as follows:—

While the sports were in progress the platform erected for dancing was being well patronized, and the excellent string band which was in attendance was in constant demand. The picnic closed early in the evening, and was one of the most successful ever held by the Cathedral congregation.

REGATTA AND PARADE.

The weather during the forenoon and afternoon was not the sort to inspire enthusiasm, but the people got full compensation by enjoying one of the most beautiful of evenings. The sun came out behind the clouds and shone with a flood of splendour, giving the town an exceedingly gay appearance.

The regatta on the Little Lake drew crowds of people to Burnham's Point. The first event on the programme was the double canoe race. There were three entries. After a hard contest the two Howards, Indians, won with two Indians from Mud Lake second. The prizes were valued at $5.50 and $2.00 for the first and second respectively. The four oared race came next. The crews were composed as follows:—J. Mercer, V. Halliday, J. Fanning and J. E. McIntyre. stroke, and H. Holden, F. Cox, A. Strickland and G. Lech, stroke. The first named crew won by about half a boat length. The prize is valued at $3.00. The single canoe race was won by Mr. Howard, with Mr. Anderson second. Mr. Leplant was given third place, though coming in ahead, on account of his not having turned both buoys—prizes, value, $3.00 and $1.50. The boys' race was won by Roberts and Gilbow, with Nesbitt and Holloway second—prize, to be yet given. The double canoe race, four paddlers in each canoe, was won by Odette, Carveth, Mason and Stock, with Craig, Clegg, Matthews and Blade, second—prize, $4 cash. This finished the races. Messrs. J. Z. Rogers and J. Millar were the judges and Mr. J. McClelland, starter. The canoes decorated with lanterns then lit their lamps and the lake was made to look quite lively for a short time. The parade was led by Mr. John Millar, Commodore of the Otonabee Canoe Club, under whose auspices the regatta and parade were held. It was decided that Mr. H. Stock and Mr. T. Barrie had the best decorated canoe and Mr. D. Breeze the second best. Handsome prizes will be awarded to these two.

THE ILLUMINATIONS.

When those attending the regatta came back to town they found it in a blaze of illumination. George street's holiday attire looked even better than in the day time. The stores were all lighted up, and every effort was put forth to make the street look its best. Prominent among the illuminations was the arch erected by the Gas Company. The bow of golden lights shed radiance over an entire block. Mr. H. LeBrun's illumination looked very handsome. The golden horseshoe was fringed with gas lights and the motto "Vive la Reine" filled the centre. On the opposite side of the street Mr. R. W. Muncaster's unique illumination attracted much attention. A device in gas jets showed the Prince of Wales' father. Above it was the word "Victoria" and below the word "Jubilee." At one side was the figures 1837 and at the other 1887. Mr. A. Hall hung out a giant T. in gas jets with V. R. at the side of it. Scallops of gas jets were in the front of Messrs. Breeze & Bain's store. Mr. R. Fair had a bust dressed in rich drapery and standing in one of the windows of the Golden Lion store. Upon the head was a crown of gas jets and above a ball with three jets, representing the three Isles. Above Chamberlain's Hotel was a circle of gas jets with the figures 50 inside of it. Messrs. McAndrew & Noble had a gas device representing a crown and the letters "V. R." above their store. The whole street was blazing with Chinese lanterns, so that it would not be possible to particularize those who illuminated in that way. Many residences were beautifully illuminated. Brock street, from George to Aylmer, was lighted up brightly. So wa Water street in front of the Horticultural Gardens. Charlotte street showed some pretty devices of illumination especially the terrace opposite the Grand Trunk station. But the most effective illumination of all was the electric light. With great liberality the Electric Light Co. not only supplied ten lights for the Gardens but erected a tower of their own on George street. The tower in the Gardens has twenty thousand candle power. It lit up the town for blocks around, and Ashburnham also basked in its light. The tower at the corner of George and Hunter was of fourteen thousand candle power, there being seven lights on it.

NOTES.

The Fire Brigade band added materially to the success of the celebration by being in attendance all day long.

The Otonabee lodge room was open during the day for the reception of visitors.

The Fire Station was open during the evening and many citizens visited it.

Mr. Drury put up the gas devices in a very creditable manner.

The address to the Queen was engrossed in a most beautiful manner by Mr. H. Grundy.

Mr. Millar and Mr. Galletly gave their services in training the children. They deserve the thanks of the citizens.

JUBILEE SERVICE.

Thanksgiving at St. John's for Her Majesty's Long and Prosperous Reign.

On Tuesday the Jubilee of Queen Victoria's reign was celebrated by divine service as appointed by the Metropolitan of Canada and the Bishop of the diocese and as requested by the Governor-General in the name of Her Majesty.

At nine o'clock in the morning the special morning and ante-communion services as appointed by the Metropolitan were read, besides the congregation others taking part in the thanksgiving who had no service of praise at their own places of worship. Appropriate thanksgiving hymns were selected.

The Rector preached a sermon in reference to the occasion. He called upon his hearers to be thankful that they were able to praise God for the Jubilee of Her Majesty and for the blessing of her long and prosperous reign of fifty years. Only three of our monarchs had before reigned so long, and in none of these cases had there been such reason for thankfulness as in the present. In the fifty years the nation had made great progress. It had greatly advanced in all ways. In its growth and extension, in the work of colonization its people had carried with them their laws, their liberties and their religion. To the Saxon family of mankind seemed to be given the faculties adapting it specially to colonize the world As the Saxons long ago came to England, established themselves there and imparted o the nation its characteristics, so their decendants had spread themselves all over the world. In the past history of the world we find one people foremost at different times. The people of Israel spread true religion, the Greeks spread literature and art, and the Romans, by consolidating and pacifying the then known world, enabled the Gospel to spread through its vast empire. Judea, Greece and Rome had thus prepared the way. It seems as if to our race was confided the great mission of carrying the Gospe throughout the world. They carry with them to all parts their love of liberty, their respect for law, and above all their love for religion and the open Bible. In the past fifty years there had been carried on a great missionary work. Our missionaries have made their conquests in many lands, not through a craving for wealth, territory or power, but to win men to God by the Gospel. Our language, which was spreading so rapidly and being diffused so widely throughout the globe, seemed to make us an instrument for the diffusion of Christianity. But with such great privileges we had great duties. We might well give thanks to God that our Sovereign had been spared for a reign of fifty years, for she had displayed a high, virtuous and religious character. By her example she had fostered virtue, purity and religion. The example of a sovereign was very powerful, and our Queen's influence had always been exerted for good. We had also to thank her for such a training of the heir to her great crown that hereafter the throne may continue to be worthily filled. Such a careful, wise training had the Queen herself, and such a training has she given to her children, so that when her heir succeeds her the nation may still have a sovereign high-minded, virtuous and religious, may still have a good example at the head of the nation. Let us pray that our Queen may be long spared to be a living witness for the right, and this life ended may be received into life everlasting.

The service was concluded by the singing of "God Save the Queen."

The offertory was for the cathedral at Halifax in commemoration of the hundreth anniversary of the consecration of the first colonial bishop.

The Daily Review

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1887.

WHERE IS THE PROFIT?

A DESPERATE attempt is being made by the annexationists to delude the farmers into advocating "Commercial Union," with its avowed consequence of political union. Misrepresentation is largely used for this purpose, market prices are falsified, and the farmers are led to believe that there would be a return of the old profits enjoyed under the previous reciprocity treaty, not being told the truth that neither the same demand nor the same prices now exist in the United States.

Let us examine the matter and see what the farmers of this part of Ontario would gain by "unrestricted reciprocity." Their principal surplus produce is wheat, but not a great proportion of this is exported out of the country, as Canada does not grow very much more than she consumes. Much of it finds its way, mostly in the shape of flour, to Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, where the consumption is greater than the production, and which otherwise would be supplied from Minneapolis. And with this market cut off we could not send wheat to the same advantage across the St. Lawrence, where, of late years, the relative price has been so low that there would have been no profit.

This improvement in our local market of late years as compared with the United States (and with Great Britain) is due to several causes. There has been the larger home market due to increased manufacturing, there has been the better price given by the millers, which has also forced the buyers for export to trench upon their margin of profit, and there has been the lowering of freights. Even this last would not have occurred but for the large quantities forwarded to the Lower Provinces, or still further to Great Britain.

Another important export is cheese, but there would be loss instead of gain in changing its destination, for the market price is lower rather than higher on the other side of the St. Lawrence. The same is the case also with butter, comparing similar qualities.

Another important item of export is live stock. But the United States are also exporters of live stock, and to the same market, so there would be no profitable demand there.

The only export of great importance that remains to be considered is barley. As to this grain we grant that there would be for the time at least some gain. In the United States they consume more barley than they produce and as they supply themselves from Canada our farmers would secure a part at least of the amount of the duty. But this would not last long; other farmers would want to share the profit, there would be an increased production and the demand being strictly limited, with the glutted markets the price would speedily fall again. It must be remembered, too, that the profits of a barley crop are most precarious; one shower of rain at a critical time may make a ruinous difference in the value. Our Republican cousins will have the brightest of malt for their lager, etc., and do not care to pay for discoloured barley.

Having considered the very dubious profits let us now turn to the loss. The farmer would find his immediate home market, the most profitable of all, sadly curtailed, for unrestricted reciprocity would mean the crushing out of our manufacturers and the loss of the custom of those employed in them. There would be the loss of the inter-provincial business, for that would be taken as before by our neighbours. There would be the loss of the Dominion revenue under a customs union, and that must result, as in the States, in a discontinuance of the subsidies, and as in the States to a direct tax upon the farmer for Provincial expenditure.

And for the sake of making this unprofitable bargain we are asked to treat the rest of the empire to which we belong as an alien and hostile people, discriminating against them in favor of foreigners. We are to close our factories that they may manufacture for us in the United States while we refuse to deal with the Mother Country.

THE Advertiser believes it would be well if a lot of the London dogs could be "taxed out of existence." Here is a poor heretic who has not yet "seen the light" of the N. P.'s creed teaching that a tax on anything makes it more plentiful and cheaper.—Chatham Banner.

The N. P. creed contains no such article as that a tax on anything will make it cheaper. The National Policy, however, by a tax on some things, when imported, has caused those things to be made in Canada and thus made them more plentiful and cheaper. A tax on tea would make that article dearer; but an import tax on cotton goods has made them more plentiful and cheaper. Other fat-witted free trade humorists try to make a point by asking, If a tax on an article makes it cheaper, why not make the tax still heavier until the article can be got for nothing? They never heard, it is reasonable to suppose, that exercise is good for the health, or they would have killed themselves sawing wood under the delusion that if they took enough exercise they would live forever. These small and harmless shafts, as well as heavier but no more effectual attacks, show the attitude of the Reformers in regard to the National Policy, despite there late leader's Malvern deliverances.

IN reference to the threat of rebellion made by the Winnipeg Free Press, the Toronto Globe says:—

These goods are all new and choice, and the prices will astound everybody. MEN'S SUITS at $2.75 and BOY'S SUITS at $1.25 worth five times the money. Our staff will be increased by six extra salesmen, but, come early and avoid the rush. The goods will not last long.

GOUGH, THE WONDERFUL CHEAP MAN,

George St., Peterborough, and 420 Queen St. West, Toronto.

It is the duty of the men of the older Provinces to purge their minds of party spirit in this great matter, and to consider solemnly the dreadful dilemma in which they must be placed in case the forecast of the Free Press be accurate.

This is a severe rebuke by the leading Reform organ to its party. In the House of Commons and elsewhere Reformers have been stirring up the Manitobans either to divert Canadian traffic to the United States or to rebel, their hope being that by injuring the Dominion they may render its people discontented with Conservative rule. The politicians of the United States do not play such unpatriotic tricks.

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

THE COUNTY COUNCIL

THE JUNE SESSION OF THE MUNICIPALITY REPRESENTATIVES.

Warden Stewart's Address on Various Subjects—A Loyal Address Adopted and sent to Her Majesty the Queen.

The County Council met on Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock in the Council Chamber Court House.

The Warden, Mr. Geo. Stewart, Deputy Reeve of Otonabee, presided, and the members were all present except Mr. Lang, M. P.

THE WARDEN'S ADDRESS.

The Warden addressed the Council, as follows:—

GENTLEMEN.—It is a matter of devout thankfulness to the Giver of all Good that we are all permitted to meet again in the enjoyment of our usual health and strength and that, although the draught has been rather severe, still as a result of the very favorable seeding time and the recent rain, the prospect is fair of an abundant harvest.

GRAND JUNCTION VS. PETERBOROUGH.

As you are doubtless well aware our Solicitor, Mr. E. B. Edwards, has gone to England to defend the County in the case now before the Privy Council. I have received most encouraging correspondence from him, with regard to the appeal, which will be laid before you.

BOBCAYGEON BRIDGE.

You will remember that application was made to you last session by the County of Victoria, to appoint an arbitrator to determine the proporation of the expense to be paid by this County in the matter of the repairs of the Bobcaygeon bridge, and that inasmuch as we were advised that this County was not liable, we declined to make such an appointment. Application has since been made by the County of Victoria to the Attorney-General to appoint an arbitrator on our behalf. This action I have instructed your Solicitor to resist on the ground that before an arbitrator is appointed a large investigation should be had in order to ascertain whether we are in any way liable. The application is now pending.

THE FLOATING BRIDGES.

The Pegion Creek bridge was so much damaged by the ice as to be unfit for public travel. Our very efficient caretaker, Mr. John Flood, has, under the direction of the County Engineer, Mr. Sanderson and myself, repaired the bridge to such an extent as to be fit for traffic. I notified the Warden of the County of Victoria and the Mayor of the Town of Peterborough as to the state of bridge, and that this County was willing to join with other interested municipalities in making the necessary repairs. I have received no reply from either the Town or the County of Victoria.

The Mud Lake bridge also suffered from the ice, but has been temporarily repaired by our obliging caretaker, Mr. Kelly, under the direction of the County Engineer.

THE LOCKS BRIDGE.

I sent the Council of the Town of Peterborough a copy of your resolution in reference to this bridge. You will receive the County Engineer's report with regard to this, and also the other bridges above mentioned, which I trust will receive your attention.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

In compliance with your instructions, the alterations to the old gaol have been completed, and that part of the Court House formerly occupied by the gaoler has been fitted up for chambers for the County Judge, office for the Clerk of the Peace and a law library.

SCOTT ACT EXPENSES.

I congratulate you on the successful issue of the efforts of the committee to whom was referred the consideration of the demand of the Board of License Commissioners for West Peterborough. When the matter was referred to this committee the County was liable for two-thirds of the expense of carrying out the provisions of the "Canada Temperance Act," no provision having been made by which the Town of Peterborough, which, although separated from the County, forms part of the West District of the County for purposes of this Act, could be made to pay any portion of these expenses. At the suggestion of your committee, ably seconded by Mr. Blezard, M. P. P., the law in reference to this matter has been amended so as to provide that towns separated from Counties shall pay a just share of the expenses of the license district of which they form a part, such share to be separately estimated and determined by the Board of License Commissioners; and it is further provided that such towns shall be liable for their proportion of the expenses for the license years of 1886 and 1887.

SCOTT ACT FINES.

I regret that our efforts to get the Order-in-Council relating to the disposal of fines imposed and collected under the Canadian Temperance Act changed have not resulting satisfactorily, although Mr. Lang, M.P., rendered us every assistance in his power. The correspondence and documents relating to this subject will be laid before you.

EQUALIZATION.

The equalization of the assessment rolls and other matters which will be brought under your notice will, I trust, receive your careful consideration.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

I feel sure that I shall have the hearty concurrence of every member of this Council when I suggest that a jubilee address of congratulation from this Council be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, whom we all love and respect, not only as our beloved Queen, and as one of the best sovereigns the world ever seen, but who as a woman and a mother has set such a noble Christian example to her subjects and to the world; and that we all unite most heartily in the prayer, Long live our Gracious Queen.

GEORGE STEWART,
Warden.

Peterborough, June 21, 1887.

Mr. KIDD moved, seconded by Mr. FINLAY,—That Messrs. Burnham, Sanderson, Moloney, Strickland, Mansfield and the mover and seconder be a Committee on the Warden's Address—Carried.

ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN.

Mr. BURNHAM said that all would concur in the remarks made by the Warden in reference to the Queen. He moved that a Committee be appointed to draft an address to Her Majesty.

The WARDEN, in accordance with the motion, named Messrs. Burnham, Strickland and Sanderson as the Committee.

Mr. BURNHAM read the report of the Committee recommending the following address:—

May it Please Your Majesty:

The Council of the County of Peterborough, Province of Ontario and Dominion of Canada, respectfully beg Your Gracious Majesty's permission to present their congratulations and good wishes on this Jubilee anniversary. The Victorian age has been to this younger Britain a period of prosperity and happiness, and the loyalty to your Majesty which makes England the heart of a United Empire is more widespread in Canada to-day than ever.

The people of this country feel that the example your Majesty has set as beloved mistress of the British nation has made that nation mistress of the world in all the arts of civilization, peace and commerce.

And may Your Majesty be pleased to accept this humble tribute of loyalty sent by your loving subjects of the County of Peterborough.

And our prayer will ever be "God Save the Queen."

Mr. BURNHAM moved, seconded by Mr. SANDERSON.—That the address to Her Majesty the Queen prepared by the Committee be adopted, and that the same be engrossed and signed by the Warden and Clerk and the Corporation seal affixed, and that the same be forwarded to Her Majesty; and that a cablegram be sent to the Queen as follows:—"The County of Peterborough congratulates Her Majesty on her happy Jubilee."—Carried.

The Council then adjourned until 10 o'clock on Wednesday forenoon.

A VOICE FROM BEHIND THE PLOUGH.

INSPIRED BY THE GREAT PREPARATIONS FOR CELEBRATION OF OUR QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

Look back full fifty years ago, just at the break of day,
In youth's sweet slumber, calm repose, a girl of eighteen lay,
She was aroused from peaceful sleep upon that bright June morn,
To hear of joy and sorrow too, so quickly to her borne,
She rose up from her gorgeous couch, white as the pearly snows,
Around her shoulders in great haste her morning shawl she throws,
She tarried not to wash or dress, nor brush her night crimpt hairs
That loosely down her shoulders flowed as she tripped down the stairs.

With slippers on her dainty feet, composure on her brow,
She met her guests with outstretched hand and graceful modest bow.
Two statesmen in her presence stood, these words they did declare,
Your uncle's dead, to Britain's crown you are the lawful heir.
The tears flowed down her youthful cheek when she heard that he was gone,
Her uncle's death seemed more to her than the honors of a throne.
In a short time that crown was placed upon her youthful brow,
She has worn it faithfully 50 years and with honor wears it now.

With modest pride, with calm resolve she grasped the reins of power,
Though young, a mind she did possess expedient to the hour.
Her judgments and decisions clear, her acts both good and wise,
Made hoary headed statesmen stand in wonder and surprise.
Though young and wearer of a crown she felt love's winning art,
And soon Prince Albert called the Good, gained both her hand and heart.
How short their matrimonial bliss, death laid her Consort low,
And of the world-wide joy she had still aches with woe.

As maiden, mother, wife and queen she nobly bore her part,
No pomp nor crown could check the flow of love within heart.
The husband and the father gone, on her the burden lay
To train her children for their rank and God's laws to obey,
Weighed down with all a widow's grief and duties as a queen,
A mother's duty, mother's love lets nothing come between.
Her precepts and examples good their fruits to-day we see,
God bless her children that still live on this her jubilee.

Not only in her palace, but all over her domains,
Her subjects' welfare and their good have marked her lengthened reign.
Of all old Englands' kings or queens a brighter never shone,
No kinder ruler ever sat upon the British throne.
She holds the reins of state and power with a firm but gentle hand,
Humanity guides all her acts, honor and mercy blend.
Her peaceful rule and honored name have spread o'er land and sea,
Till emperors, kings and queens rejoice on this her jubilee.

She sways the sceptre more by love than with the tyrant's rod,
He highest aim has been to please her people and her God,
How fully she achieved her wish the joy to-day will prove,
She still lives in the people's hearts in true undying love.
Although a golden crown she wears, in robes of crimson dressed,
A woman's tender loving heart beats strongly in her breast.
Compassionate love within her breast strikes on the highest key,
Her people echo back that sound on this her jubilee.

When any of her soldiers brave some daring deed performed,
Rushed boldly to the cannon's mouth or dangerous trenches stormed,
Saved one or more brave comrades' lives regardless of their own—
To heroes worthy of reward her gratitude was shown.
When sad calamities transpired or want spread o'er the land,
Her's was not sympathy alone, but liberal giving hand,
Each woe that crushed her people's hearts she felt in some degree,
Her pity moved and still it flows on this her jubilee.

She kindly feels for heavy hearts grieved by bereavement's dart,
Because its poisoned barb still stings her own long wounded heart.
Wisdom springs from beneath her crown, love rushes from the throne,
The orphan and the widow's grief she measures by her own.
And when she treads Auld Scotia's hills to breathe refreshing air,
She enters the poor peasants' cots and feeds the hungry there,
Her angel hand and queenly voice converses kind and free,
How grand auld Scotia's hills will ring on this her jubilee.

Long live our gracious heaven-sent queen, to-day rings far and wide,
Above the sound of summer breeze or noise of ocean's tide.
That shout has gone up fifty years upon her natal days,
They were but shadows of the joys her jubilee displays.
When she lays down her earthly crown so long and faithful worn,
We hope a brighter heavenly one will her loved head adorn,
Her people's prayer—God spare our queen, in health and life that she May reign o'er us for many years beyond her jubilee.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

The Superiority of the "Royal Flavoring Extracts" is purity and strength.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT

FIRST SESSION OF THE SIXTH CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

Model Railway Bill—Opposition Leadership Land Grants—Government Business.

SATURDAY, June 18.—A number of bills were read a third time.

RAILWAY BILLS.

Sir H. LANGEVIN moved to adopt the committees report as to changes in the rules regarding railway bills, embodying a model bill.

The debate was adjourned till Monday.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir J. MACDONALD moved that Government business should have precedence on Monday and asked Mr. Laurier, as leader of the opposition to second it.

Mr. LAURIER said he would second it, but he disclaimed being leader of the opposition.

RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

Mr. WHITE moved the House into committee on free land grants to railways, 6,400 acres a mile each to the Alberta and Athabasca, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan and the Medicine Hat Railway companies.

Sir R. CARTWRIGHT thought a money deposit should always be required.

Mr. MILLS advocated free trade in railways.

After some discussion the resolutions were adopted and a bill was read a first and second time.

SUPPLY.

The House went into Committee of Supply and passed a number of items.

BUSINESS.

Sir J. MACDONALD moved that the House adjourn till Monday at 1 o'clock to sit till 6. They would honour Her Majesty by imitating her example of industry and sit on Tuesday.

REVIEW.

JUBILEE POEM.—We have received a Jubilee Poem, humbly dedicated to Her Most Gracious Majesty, Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and Empress of India by John Massie, M.D., Keene." It is a poem of some length having twenty-five, nine lined stanzas, and to a graceful sketch of the events of our sovereign's reign, adds in eloquent words the reasons her people have for rejoicing in her long reign and celebrating its jubilee. Dr. Massie displays great facility of versification, and clothes his loyal thoughts in poetic language. That our readers may judge for themselves we

To thee the sea-girt gems of ocean call—
The dark parts of the earth all cry to thee:
"Oh bless us, thou Queen Mother! bless us all!
"It is in love, not fear, we bow the knee";
"Where'er thy sceptre touches men are free;
"Oppression dies, ere half his race is run;
Then let thy children round thee gathered be.
"It is thy heart that draws us, every one,
"Thy Queenly, woman heart, our magnet, and our sun."

From all thy wave-wash'd shores, thy turrets gray,
Thy sea-beat cliffs, thy rocks and bustling towers,
Of man's and Nature's build; and far away
Beyond Old Ocean's marge, where Asian bowers
Awake with melting song the morning hours;
From lands that stem the Atlantic's western surge,
And where the fierce sirocco hotly scours
Australian plains; from earth's remotest verge,
To the all loyalty, and love, and joy, converge.

The drum's loud heart doth pulse the morning air
In rapid note, or stronger throbbings deep,
The clarion's brazen blast, the trumpet's blare,
The bugle's rounder klang, the cornet's sweep;
The bellowing cannon on the rampart steep;
The living surge of joyous men; the roar
Of a great nation's love, that will not keep
Pent up; but thy far realm's deep flooding o'er,
Return in whelming tide to Britain's regal shore.

"For contemplation he, and valor formed,
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace."

John Milton in his "Paradise Lost" thus distinguishes woman from man. Diseases fall to her lot that do not to man's, peculiar to her soft and more refined nature. A remedy adapted to the cure of her peculiar diseases is found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," for women. Thousands who have used it attest its great worth.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

A MAGNIFICENT DEMONSTRATION IN HONOR OF THE SOVEREIGN.

Dense Crowds in London—An Enthusiastic Reception—The Service in Westminster Abbey.

LONDON, June 21.—The jubilee demonstration was a stupendous success. Vast multitudes, numbering over a million people, have witnessed the greatest street pageant in English history. With perfection of order not a single incident occurred to mar the harmony of the great demonstration. The scene presented by the long lines of streets, what with the draped pavillions, the endless floral vistas, the innumerable gaities of flag, banner and trophy blended into masses of decorations, and the ever moving and immeasurable sea of faces, has been one of dashing brilliancy and marvellous animation.

ON THE ROUTE.

The line of the procession from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey was as follows: From the Palace portals along Constitution Hill, Piccadilly, Regent street, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall East, Cockspur street, Northumberland avenue, Thames embankment, Bridge street to the Abbey. The line of route was kept by nearly 10,000 troops representing all branches of the service, and in addition 600 boys from the naval training ships were draw up at the base of the Nelson monument.

In addition to the military and navy, thousands of police, both mounted and on foot, were on duty under the command of Sir Charles Warren. The military force was under command of Gen. Gibbs and Col. Stirling of the Goldstream Guards. The particular feature at Buckingham Palace was that the two services were equally honored, the guards lining one side of the roadway at Buckingham Palace gates, and on the other side the blue jackets were posted. The same services were also represented in a like manner at the entrance to Westminster Abbey.

The first part of the royal procession was composed of the Indian princes and a few minor German princes.

This was well received by the populace. A few minutes before 11 o'clock the second part of the procession left. This was composed of some fifteen carriages, the occupants being the King of Denmark, the King of Belgium, the King of Saxony, the King of the Hellenes, the Crown Prince of Austria, the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Queen of the Belgians, the Crown Prince of Greece, Prince George of Greece, the Prince of Naples and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. This part was also well received by the people. These two processions helped to keep the way to the Abbey open and exercise the pent-up enthusiasm of the vast multitude along the way, waiting impatiently to see and cheer the Queen.

Punctually at 11.15 a. m. the Queen in an open carriage emerged from the palace gates. At sight of her thousands of voices were lifted up in cheers, the applause being accompanied by the music of the many military bands stationed in front of the palace. The Queen did not wear her state robes, but was dressed in black. Her carriage was drawn by eight ponies. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cannaught, her sons; the Crown Prince Imperial of Germany, the Marquis of Lorne, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Helstein and Prince Henry of Battenburg, her sons-in-law, and Prince Albert Victor and George of Wales, Prince Alfred of Edinburgh, and Prince William of Prussia, her grandsons, all rode in full uniform beside the Queen's coach as a body guard. When the people of the palace had shouted themselves hoarse cheering for the Queen they continued to cry out "Long life to the Prince and Princess of Wales."

The Queen as she left the palace seemed to be in excellent spirits, and she smiled and bowed graciously to the people on every side. The Queen's carriage was a large one of chocolate color, wheels red and the royal arms in gold emblazoned upon the panels. Red morocco harness was used for the horses which were otherwise decorated with royal blue ribbons. All the servants wore state liveries of scarlet and gold. The other carriages containing members of the royal family were of a gorgeous character, horsed with four bays each and all open.

The procession proceeded at a smart walking pace into Constitution Hill, and then slowly made its way until Wellington Arch was reached, when the first introduction to the London streets ensued. Emerging from the Wellington Arch, the first to greet the Queen were the convalescents, patients and others at St. George's hospital, which was packed from basement to roof, seats having been erected for many thousands over the roof of the hospital.

On the procession nearing the Abbey the troops saluted, guns fired, the bells of the churches rang out merry peals and flags were run up, the cheering being continued until the Queen had reached the west doors

IN THE ABBEY.

Inside the Abbey the scene was one of surpassing beauty. The picture was absolutely dazzling. The ladies displayed their jewels, which flashed and reflashed as they reflected the rays of the sun that found their way through the transepts. In the Abbey 3 tiers of galleries with seats were erected, seating about 10,000 persons. The peers and their wives were seated in the south transepts. The ambassadors and diplomatic corps right and left of the peers; members of the House of Commons in the north transepts, while the seats for members of the reigning families of Europe, etc., were within the communion rails; all the great learned societies and corporations were represented, whilst the notables of the law, science, art and agriculture and workingmen's representatives from all parts of the parts of the Kingdom had seats duly allotted to them.

The Queen's advent was arranged so that she entered the Abbey precisely at noon. Dr Bridge, organist of the Abbey who had for the occasion a specially trained choir of 250 voices, selected from the great choirs of London, and a number of eminent soloists, besides a large accompaniment of brass instruments and drums, gradually drew the immense congregation into silence and their respective places, to be prepared for the Queen's coming, by rendering a number of selections in a manner that made every person within hearing of the great organ eager to catch its softest note.

When the Queen reached the Abbey and the royal procession was forming in a marquee outside the west door, the State trumpeters in gold and crimson uniforms executed fanfares from the organ loft, nearly in the centre of the edifice.

When the clergy at the head of the royal procession moved into the church the National Anthem was rendered by the organ. The music was thrilling. The audience rose as a unit and lent their 10,000 voices to accompany the choir. The effect was so grand, so profound, that many were moved to tears.

At this moment the Queen appeared. Then the singing ceased and the Processional March from Handel's "Occasional Oratorio" was given by the organ during the progress of the Queen and the royal family to the dais.

When they were seated the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Dean of Westminster, who had taken their places within the sacrarium, began the service by asking of God a blessing on the Queen. The "Te Deum Laudamus" was then sung by the choir to the music composed by the Prince Consort, the Queen having requested this. The Lord's Prayer was said and the responses (adapted to the occasion) were intoned. Then three special prayers were offered up, after which the "Exaudiat Te Dominus" was sung, with organ and brass band accompaniment. The Dean of Westminster advanced to the altar rails and read the lesson for the day, I. Peter ii., viii.

Dr. Bridge's special anthem, selected by the Queen last year, was next rendered, followed by the choral "Goltha," composed by the Prince Consort. In the rests the National Anthem was produced. Two more special prayers for the defence of the Faith, the spiritual welfare of the kingdom and for peace and love followed, and were supplemented by the benediction, which was pronounced by the Archbishop.

When the benediction had been said the Queen's sons knelt before her and kissed her hand. They arose and Her Majesty kissed each upon the cheek. The princesses next advanced to the Queen and kissed her hand and she kissed them all, favouring some twice, making unusual demonstrations over the Prince of Wales and Princess Beatrice. Other relatives of the Queen then saluted and she shook hands with some and kissed others, kissing the Crown Prince Frederick William of Germany twice, very heartily each time. At all this the congregation applauded warmly. All the princesses upon the dais wore light dresses.

After the royal salutations had all been made the Queen descended the dais and moved out of the Abbey, preceded by the royal family, the congregation standing and cheering with fervor all the while, Mendelssohn's march from "Athalie" being rendered by the organ and band until Her Majesty had departed. The congregation at once dissolved, selections of sacred music being played until all had left the Abbey.

It was past 1 o'clock when the Queen emerged from the Abbey. She at once resumed her carriage and returned to Buckingham Palace, this time taking the route she went after her coronation fifty years ago.

The Queen seemed fairly overcome with the loyalty displayed by her subjects. The Marquis and Marchioness of Salisbury, who had hurried to the palace by a shorter way from the Abbey, were present to receive her. The Queen bore her journey well, and was seen soon after returning laughing and smiling at the royal children, who were upon the main balcony of the palace, and kissing her hands to them.

BANQUET.

A reception and banquet was given at the palace to-night, the guests being limited to members of the royal families and diplomats.

Dominion Day Celebration.

A special meeting of the General Jubilee Committee will be held this evening, at which every member is requested to attend. It has been thought advisable to complete the programme of events, interrupted yesterday by the rain, on July 1st, Dominion Day, and the matter will be decided this evening.

The Wizard Oil Company

under the auspices of Dr. Pitz (whose medical attainments are highly spoken of) gave a seance on the Market Square last night which was well attended and highly appreciated. This company was here some two years ago and the medicines they are vending were much prized by those who used them, particularly the "Wizard Oil." The company intend to remain at the Grand Central Hotel for a week or ten days.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL

THE JUNE SESSION OF THE MUNICIPALITY REPRESENTATIVES.

Report on the Warden's Address—Bobcaygeon Bridges—G. J. R. Suit—Scott Act Fines and Police Magistrates—Young's Point Road—Protestant Home—Oddfellows' Grand Lodge.

WEDNESDAY.

The Council resumed at 10 o'clock.

WARDEN'S ADDRESS.

Mr. BURNHAM read the following report of the Committee on the Warden's Address:—

The Special Committee on the Warden's Address beg to report as follows:—

1. The Committee concur in the opening remarks of the Warden in regard to the prospects of an abundant harvest and hope his expectations may be realized.

2. In the matter of the suit of the Grand Junction Railway the Committee are glad to learn that matters are progressing favourably for the County and trusts that we soon shall see an end to this long pending and vexatious litigation.

3. With regard to the Bobcaygeon bridges we regret that the County of Victoria has not seen fit to adopt other means of ascertaining the liability of this County, but seeks to submit a question of law to arbitration and refuses to proceed in such a manner as will enable that question to be decided.

4. We concur in the action of the Warden in regard to the Pigeon Creek and Mud Lake bridges and we trust that the municipalities most interested in the matter, viz., the County of Victoria and the Town of Peterborough, will see it to be to their interest to join with the County in making the Pigeon Creek bridge safe for public travel.

5. In the matter of the locks bridge we trust that the Town will act promptly in providing for its share of the expenditure necessary.

6 Your Committee are pleased to know that the necessary changes in the County buildings have been satisfactorily completed.

7. Is is gratifying to your Committe to learn that the law in reference to the expenses of the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act has been so amended as to provide that the Town of Peterborough will be called on to pay an equitable proportion of such expenses.

8. Your Committee regret that the Goverment has persisted in its unjust Order-in-Council whereby the Town is enabled to appropriate the moneys justly the property of the County, and your committee trust that the Town will not insist on taking advantage of a technicality, but will do justice and equity and refund their ill-gotten gains.

9. The Committee join with the Warden in his congratulations to Her Gracious Majesty and recommend that a suitable address be prepared.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

JOHN BURNHAM, Chairman.

June 22nd, 1887.

BOBCAYGEON BRIDGES.

Mr. BENNETT was heard in reference to the arbitration in regard to the Bobcaygeon bridge. The County of Victoria had filed a petition asking the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to appoint an arbitrator for this County. He read correspondence on the matter between himself and their Toronto counsel.

Mr. BURNHAM moved,—That the Warden, Mr. Sanderson and Mr. Pearse be a delegation to proceed to Toronto when the case comes before the Attorney-General, in accordance with the wish of their counsel.

Mr. Burnham's name was added and the motion adopted.

G. J. R. VS. COUNTY.

Correspondence from Mr. E. B. Edwards, who is in London attending to the suit of the Grand Junction vs. Peterborough, was read. The case had been set down for hearing by the Privy Council, but might not be reached until July. Nothing had occurred to injure their prospects. He was well pleased with their English counsel, Sir R. Webster. He had been able, by being present, to advance matters.

SCOTT ACT FINES.

The correspondence in regard to the Scott Act fines was read. The memorial sent to the Government asked to have the Order-in-Council changed so that fines imposed in the Town Police Court in County cases would be handed over to the County. Letters were read from Mr. Lang, M. P., stating that he had handed the memorial to the proper Department, and that in an interview afterwards the Deputy Minister of Justice informed him that no action was likely to be taken, as the Order-in-Council was passed for the general good and seemed to be working well, the only complaint being from Peterborough; but he suggested that an equitable settlement be made for the past and that County cases be tried in the County in the future.

The WARDEN said that they had applied to the Town Council for a refund of the fines but without result.

Mr. KIDD said that the law had been that the County would get everything, and it was changed so that the town got everything. It seemed to him to be a glaring injustice. They should not let the matter rest and should get a direct reply from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MOLONEY said that a mistake was made in appointing a County Police Magistrate in the town.

COUNTY POLICE MAGISTRATES.

Mr. SANDERSON moved, seconded by Mr. BROWN,—That a committee be appointed to consider the position of the County in regard to their Police Magistrates and to report to this council what steps should be taken.

Mr. KIDD said that when a second Police Magistrate was appointed the one first appointed ceased to fill the position.

Mr. SANDERSON read the law bearing on the question.

Mr. BROWN still thought the appointment of the Committee necessary.

The CLERK read the minutes of January, 1886, asking for the appointment of a Police Magistrate.

Mr. BURNHAM said the difficulty had arisen through Mr. Dumble being Police Magistrate for the County, and his Clerk being Town Treasurer. Mr. Dumble should have handed over those fines to the County.

Mr. KIDD argued that Mr. Dumble's appointment ceased when a second appointment was made.

Mr. BURNHAM asked if anyone for the County recommended Mr. Edmison for a Police Magistrate.

Mr. BURNHAM said [illegible] pay one Magistrate, and they should pass a resolution refusing to pay Mr. Edmison. There might be more than one Magistrate, but they were only bound to pay one.

Mr. STRICKLAND—Did Mr. Kidd recommend Mr. Edmison's appointment?

Mr. KIDD declined to answer. He argued that, as matters stood, they were only responsible for the salary of one Magistrate.

Mr. BURNHAM said if they had only to pay one magistrate he held they should pay the one they had recommended, and not the one Mr. Kidd had recommended.

Mr. KIDD said Mr. Burnham had no right to say he had recommended Mr. Edmison.

Mr. BURNHAM said that a principle was involved in this. The Government now appointed an officer, without consulting the Council, whom the Council was expected to pay. The License Commissioners made demands on them which they had to pay, without audit or check. He wondered how far this system was going to be carried.

Mr. KIDD said that he had not recommended Mr. Edmison and he did not know who did or why he was appointed. He felt as he always did that the Scott Act should be enforced, because it was on the statute books and because the liquor traffic was an unholy one. He would not have recommended Mr. Edmison's appointment, and if any act of the Council would retain Mr. Dumble and still give them the fines he would favor it.

The motion was carried, and the Warden named as the committee Messrs. Burnham, Strickland, Kidd, Sanderson, Moloney, Finlay, Fitzgerald, Brown, Elmhirst and Mansfield.

YOUNG'S POINT ROAD.

Dr. Douglas and Mr. James Ingram addressed the Council in reference to the road between Lakefield and Young's Point. They asked for an additional grant. After some discussion the matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

The Council adjourned at 12 o'clock.

The Council resumed in the afternoon.

THE PROTESTANT HOME.

A deputation consisting of Mrs. Vernon, Mrs. Gilmour, and Miss Roger, lady directors of the Peterborough Protestant Home, waited on the Council to ask a grant to aid in putting in a furnace and heating apparatus in the Home.

Mr. STRICKLAND moved, seconded by Mr. MANSFIELD,—That a grant of $100 be given to the Peterborough Protestant Home.

Mr. FINLAY moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. FORSTER,—That a grant of $200 be given.

Mr. WALSH moved in amendment to the amendment, seconded by Mr. MOLONEY,—That the matter be referred to the Finance Committee.—Carried.

Dr. BELL was heard and urged the giving of a grant. The Home was a worthy institution. The doctors visited it in turn, the Roman Catholic physicians taking their turn. The greater part of the support comes from the town. The ladies did not ask an annual grant, but assistance to put the bulding in a proper condition.

ODDFELLOWS' GRAND LODGE.

Messrs. J. R. Stratton, D. H. Moore and Dr. Bell, a deputation from the Oddfellows, having previously addressed the Council in Committee,

Mr. MOLONEY moved, seconded by Mr. KIDD,—That this Council grant to the Oddfellows of Peterborough for the holding of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows the use of the Court Room and adjoining rooms for the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th of August next, on condition that Messrs. J. R. Stratton, D. H. Moore and Dr. R. W. Bell hereby guarantee to indemnify this Council for any damage that may occur to the building, such damage to be assessed by the County Clerk and caretaker immediately after the session of the Grand Lodge.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

H. S. Griffin & Co. returned yesterday from the city, where they were hunting up bargains in dry goods and millinery. It's wonderful the goods they have. See their prints at the door, and see their black grenadine for 5c. a yard. Tell all your friends that Griffin & Co. are going in for big drives in special bargains every week. d145

A SCOTT ACT OUTRAGE.

Dastardly Revenge on a Prominent Temperance Worker.

UXBRIDGE, June 22.—On Saturday night Mr. Thos. Armstrong, milkman and farmer, of Uxbridge, a prominent Scott Act worker, had his herd of milch cows poisoned by persons who placed Paris green mixed with salt in the field where they were enclosed for the night. Of the nine cows which were poisoned, two valued at $125 are dead and two or three others are not expected to live. The town council, at its meeting last night, offered a reward of $500 for the apprehension of the guilty parties. Great indignation is felt by all the citizens over the outrage.

A FRANCO-ITALIAN WARCLOUD.

Plain Speaking of the Italian Press on French Interference in the Red Sea.

LONDON, June 22.—The recently reported treaty between the Government of France and King John of Abyssinia still remains the basis of leading articles in all of the Italian newspapers condemnatory of French attempts to embroil King John with the Italian companies on the Red Sea littoral. The Florence Nazione says the Italian Government will sustain the Red Sea factories and protect the interests of those connected with them and any attack made against them will be considered as having been precipitated by the French intriguers in furtherance of that policy which for a generation has endeavored in every possible way to counteract Italian influence and frustrate the civilizing effort of Italian civilization in Tunis and elsewhere on the shores of the Mediterranean. The entire press call upon the Government to stand firm and resist by force of arms, if necessary, the interference of France not only in Italian affairs in Abyssinia and Nubia, but in any other part of the globe where Italy may have legitimately gained a foothold.

HORTICULTURAL.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—It has seemed very strange to the writer, who has been for many years connected with horticultural societies, that a town of the extent and standing of Peterborough, with a [illegible] population, judging by the windows and gardens, should take such little interest in supporting a Horticultural Society worthy of the place, the exhibitions being far inferior to those in much smaller towns. This appears to be shortsighted, as these exhibitions tend greatly to the improvement, not only of the taste for the beautiful, but of the useful as well, seeing that encouragement given to the producers of flowers, fruits and vegetables excites them to grow the best of these articles, as competition increases their sales, and not only that, the larger production of a good article causes a corresponding demand. A good fruit or vegetable is always cheaper than a bad one, even if the consumer does pay a little more for it, but the writer imagines that the increased sales caused by competition would keep down prices. Last year's exhibition was the first he took particular notice of, and he thought it simply a farce, it seemed to be kept up only by the hard and disinterested efforts of a few public spirited individuals. The professionals' show was good of its kind, but very small, and that of the amateurs made by some five or six exhibitors only made him wonder at the apathy shown.

Now, this being the Jubilee year, a splendid opportunity offers of celebrating it, though not on the exact date, by getting up such a show as has not yet been seen in this, one of the, if not the nicest town in the Province—so let it be—let us astonish the strangers who may be here at the time, and the natives as well.

Another thing, the writer begs to propose, and that is, that some one better able to do it, should write up this matter vigorously, and that those who can should canvass for subscriptions.

Yours truly,

GARTEN.

Peterborough, June 22nd, 1887.

New Firm.

With much pleasure we learn that Messrs Dawson Bros., two of our young townsmen are launching their bark on the sea of commerce, owners and masters of their own craft. Both in their respective spheres have been held in high estimation for their moral, social and commercial characteristics. Mr. Edwd. Dawson was many years in Mr. G. A. Cox's office, where his untiring civility won universal approbation. Mr. G. Dawson was for some time in Mr. W. W. Johnston's dry goods establishment and the last six years in Mr. M. Sullivan's, and is favorably known and respected. These gentlemen have bought the stock of the late Mr. John Erskine, which they will dispose of at figures so low, that they may well be styled "Jubilee Prices," and when cleared out of "the old" they will fill up with "the new" of the very best in the market. We wish them all the success we are sure they merit.

ENTERTAINING HER GUESTS.

LONDON, June 22.—The Queen showed no ill effects after the completion of her long and arduous duties. She was in excellent health. After a short rest on returning to the palace, she reviewed the naval brigade from Portsmouth. In the evening she entertained 64 royal guests at a banquet in her own room, and 132 members of the various royal households were entertained at other tables.

ROWS IN BELFAST.

[illegible] were passing through Carrickhill district last evening they were attacked by a party of Catholics. The Orangemen of the district took sides with the band, and stones flew thick and fast for about 15 minutes, when police interfered and drove the mobs down narrow lanes in the vicinity. The mobs increased in numbers, returned and fought with greater violence than before for fully an hour. The police found themselves powerless and summoned assistance. When this arrived the mobs were scattered. Several police were injured.

THREATENED FAMINE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 22.—There has been a failure of crops in Asia Minor, and the districts of Adana, Nutapia, are threatened with a famine. An American missionary, Mr. Montgomery, says that the people of these districts are already in great distress. The Sultan held a cabinet council to-day to discuss the subject, and despatched a commission to institute measures of relief.

THE CHILDREN'S FETE.

Thirty Thousand Little Ones Celebrate the Jubilee—Royal Visitors.

LONDON, June 22.—At the children's fete originated by Mr. Lawson, of the Telegraph, who subscribed £1,000, in honor of the Queen's Jubilee held to-day in Hyde Park, 30,000 little ones were present. They were arrayed on the great lawn and made a pretty picture. The Prince and Princess of Wales and their sons and daughters, accompanied by a number of the royal guests, visited the park during the fete. The children at once freed themselves from restraint, broke the rope barriers and rushed pell mell toward the visitors, and packed themselves in solid groups around them. All etiquette vanished, and the Princes and Princess, who seemed delighted at their position, mixed among the children with perfect freedom and pleasure. All at once the children began to sing "God Bless the Prince of Wales." They sang in every key, but their earnestness and enthusiasm made up for the lack of harmony. The visitors then made their way to the platform erected for their accommodation.

THE QUEEN'S ARRIVAL.

The Queen soon arrived. When it was announced that she was coming the children massed themselves in an orderly manner along both sides of the road over which Her Majesty's carriage passed, and moved with it towards the stand, the bands assembled playing the National Anthem, which the children all sang with grand effect. The Queen reached and ascended the platform while the music was proceeding. At its conclusion she presented a memorial cup to a little girl who had been selected to represent all the children assembled. When the Queen departed the whole assemblage sang "Rule Britannia." Mrs. Gladstone and Lord Spencer were present. A number of the aristocracy lent their assistance in making the fete a success.

It was feared that there would be a difficulty in supplying such an immense multitude of children with drinking water, but the difficulty was obviated by the War Office, which lent a large number of military water carts from Woolwich.

THE THREE TS.

A new specific for the troubles of the workingman has been found—or, rather, an old remedy has been prescribed under a new name. A lecturer has stated that the great remedy for scarcity of money and lack of relaxation is Toil, Thrift and Temperence, and the apt, alliterative phrase is one that will live. Without labor, temperance and careful economy workingmen certainly cannot secure comfort, without speaking of a competence, and with these they may obtain both. But the objection of the Knights of Labor and of labor reformers generally is that too much toil and too close economy is required to even keep the pot boiling cheerfully, and that to accumulate anything like a competence by their labor, without resorting to means that are not within the reach of all, they would have to deprive themselves of comforts to an extent that would make life hardly worth living. To prescribe toil, thrift and temperance, while the specific is no doubt a good one, and one that will in many cases give relief, will not meet the case made out by labor reformers. Their chief aim is to abolish monopoly and usury, and they have formulated some plans for accomplishing that object. These plans, as far as they are understood, are worth considering, and some of them it would be difficult to point out a fallacy in. It is true that some labor reformers advocate a form of irredeemable currency, and in this they cannot expect to succeed, as that is a plan that, if adopted, could not be counted on to give relief; but others aim at having the currency all issued by the Government, and the State taking into its own hands the work now done for the people by the chartered banks. Again, they claim that there is no good reason why the Government should not own and control the railways and telegraphs, as well as the post offices, and that by the Government operating the banks, or doing the work now done by them, and the railways and telegraphs, they would be operated solely in the interests of business and of the people, and that commerce—and consequently the people—would be relieved of a tax that under the present system forms a revenue for a few, and builds up large though comparatively few private fortunes. In short, the labor reformers ask that the laborer should receive as much of the wealth he produces as possible, and that opportunities for taxing his labor and directing portions of its proceeds into other pockets should be limited or abolished. If these views could be carried out to the full extent all would become laborers or producers, and none could be idle; and the argument is that when all were producers, and none drones, no one would be required to labor so hard or to work so long in order to produce enough to provision and clothe the community. Thus all would work nearly alike, and each would receive the benefit of his labor, free from monopolist taxes or rates to produce dividends on watered stocks, and there would be more time for those who now labor with their hands to seek relaxation and pleasure. To men who hold such views as these it is useless to talk of toil, thrift and temperance, as the cure-all for the evils from which they suffer, and the only way to meet them is to show them the impracticability of their plans, or to join them in bringing about the reforms they advocate.

The Globe fears that oleomargarine has been imported into Canada from the United States either as butter or soap grease. It wants the importation of butter prohibited, because even the small quantity of oleomargarine that might be smuggled through would injure the farmers. And at the same time the Globe wants butter, soap grease, oleomargarine and everything else admitted from the United States free from all restrictions! Would not commercial union be a bonanza for the oleomargarine makers and shoddy manufacturers of the States? But Canada prefers good butter made in Canadian dairies and better goods manufactured by Canadian workmen.

DOURO.

An Aged Settler's Death—On Monday evening, at six o'clock, one of the old settlers of Douro, Mr. Timothy Coughlin, passed away from this world in which he had spent about a century. He calculated that he was fully 96 years old, but it is believed that he was even older than that, and had passed the century line. He enjoyed good health up to a couple of years before his death, when his great age began to tell on him, and his intellectual faculties were unimpaired to the end. He was born in County Cork, Ireland, and came to Canada in 1837, and settled in Douro in 1838. He leaves four sons, one in Oshawa, two in Michigan and one in California and one daughter in Michigan. He also left behind him a number of grandchildren, several great-grandchildren and a great-great-grandchild 14 years old.

CANADIAN IRON DUTIES.

Marquis of Lorne Defends Protection and Takes Earl Spencer to Task.

London, June 21.—The Marquis of Lorne in a letter to the Times takes Earl Spencer to task for complaining of the mildness of the Government's language regarding the Canadian tariff. He asks whether Earl Spencer is prepared to go to the length of vetoing any protective tariff voted by an Irish Parliament in Dublin. His Irish friends would hardly thank him for denying to Ireland what they consider the first of her necessities, namely, the encouragement of her industries through some form of protection.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

FIRST SESSION OF THE SIXTH CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

The Elm Export Duties—Quebec Ship Labourers—Deepening the St Lawrence—Lake St. Peter Debt.

Monday, June 20.—A number of public and private bills were read a third time.

DIVORCE REFUSED.

There was considerable discussion over the Ash divorce bill, which was thrown out.

ELM EXPORT DUTIES.

In Committee on the Tariff Bill the export duty on elm logs was struck out after some discussion.

SHIP LABOURERS.

Mr. Curran objected to the penalties for other means besides violence.

Several other members spoke to the same effect.

Mr. Thompson said the term "unlawfull" was the key to the following words, as there would be no punishment except for unlawful means. To render this quoted clear he would strike out the words to which objection was taken.

Mr. Mitchell moved the adjournment of the debate.

Tuesday, June 21.—The Ash Divorce Bill was replaced on the order paper.

THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Sir C. Tupper moved the House into Committee on the advance of $325,000 to the Montreal Harbor Commissioners for deepening the river at Cap a la Roche.

Mr. Stanley advocated making the river free to Montreal and the assumption of the Lake St. Peter debt.

Sir C. Tupper said this subject was under consideration. The proper time to d it was when the whole work of deepening was completed. He would not give any pledge till then.

SUPPLY.

The House went into Committee of Supply and passed a number of items.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Obituary.—It is with deep regret that we chronicle the death of one of the most respected residents, Mr. Thomas Magee, who lived in Emily about four miles north east of this place, which took place on Monday, June 13th, after a lingering illness of four or five years, which was very severe for the last two weeks before his death. The funeral took place on the following Wednesday and was attended by a very large concourse of friends and acquaintences who followed the remains to the Omemee cemetary, where it was interred. Mrs. Magee, and the other members of the family, have the deepest heart-felt sympathy of the whole community in their sad bereavement.

School Report.—The following is an account of a written examination held in our school last week, showing the number of marks obtained by the pupils in the second, third, fourth and fifth classes:—

2nd Class—Max. 160; Grace Holmes, 147; Mary Holmes, 123; Bruce McPherson, 120; George Holmes, 112; John W. Mordaunt, 90.

Postponed.—The public school picnic which was to have come off on June 21st is postponed, owing to the rain, until Saturday, June 25th. A pleasant time is expected if the weather should prove favorable. All are cordially invited to attend, and enjoy the games that are to be on the grounds that day.

TIDE OF IMMIGRATION.

The time is coming when Canada, and not the United States, will be the universal home for immigrants from every clime. We have the raw material for them to work upon, the land; it is the land that attracted the great mass of immigrants to the United States. European emigrants, and for that matter American too, will be impelled to go where agricultural land awaits their industry, to make it fruitful.—Monetary Times.

BREAKING THE BOND.

Surely the existing relation of Canada to Great Britain implies a mutual moral obligation; that, while the mother country is bound to defend her offspring if attacked, the offspring is reciprocally bound not to put her in a worse position, in respect to her trade, than she puts a foreign country. If she puts her in a worse position than a foreign nation, she violates this obligation, and breaks the bond of union. Now, if the bond is to be broken, the act ought at least to be done avowedly, directly, and not, as it were, by a side wind.—Monetary Times.

Classification of Breeds of Pigs.

There has been great confusion in the names of these, owing to their being called after the different counties, towns and estates where bred, although differing little or nothing in color or characteristics. In consequence of this, the Agricultural Societies in Great Britain have recently determined to put an end to these numerous names, and now reduce the whole to about eight classes. They have taken all the white swine of the kingdom, and amalgamated them to three breeds, designating them as "Large Whites," "Middle Whites," and "Small Whites," in the same manner they have named the black swine, although there is not so great a difference in the respective weights as with the whites. The three former vary, full-grown, from 300 to 900 pounds. Some few have attained still larger weights, even as high as 1,200 younds; but the pork of such is coarse and of inferior quality, and therefore latterly avoided. The three latter vary, full-grown, only about 250 to 700 pounds. In consequence of their being more particularly adapted to turn out tender, lean, juicy hams and shoulders for smoking, and side pieces for bacon, the Berkshire and the Tamworth breeds are to be kept distinct as now; for the former have more or less white mingled with black, and the Tamworth reddish-brown spots on a rather dirty white ground. We wish the above classification of the breeds of swine could be adopted by our agricultural societies.—American Agriculturist.

CONVERT YOUR OWN.

No doubt Mr. Butterworth will urge the Dufferin lake farmers to go storming at the gates of the capital at Washington to compel Uncle Samuel to grant commercial union. Now is Mr. Butterworth aware that for eight years a very large measure of commercial union has been on the Dominion statute books, and that his countrymen would have none of it? Why does he try to convert us to commercial union? Let him go and convert his own people.—Hamilton Spectator.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

"Baas Frank's black horse," he muttered to himself. "The black horse has a cracked heel and one foot hits the ground more softly than the others. What is Baas Frank coming here for? After missie (Bessie), I think. He would be mad if he knew that missie went down to the plantation with Baas Niel just now. People go into plantations to kiss each other (Jantje was not far out there), and it would make Baas Frank mad if he knew that. He would strike me if I told him, or I would tell him."

The horse's hoofs were getting near by now, so Jantje slipped as easily and naturally as a snake into a thick tuft of rank grass that grew between the blue gums and waited.

Presently the big horse approached, and the snake like Hottentot raised his head ever so little and peered out with his beady black eyes through the straw like grass stems. They fell on Muller's cold face. It was evident that he was in a reflective mood—in an angrily reflective mood.

"What is Baas Frank thinking of, I wonder?" said Jantje to himself as horse and man passed within four feet of him. Then rising, he crossed the road, and slipping round by a back way like a fox from a covert, was standing at the stable door with a vacant and utterly unobservant expression of face some seconds before the black horse and its rider had reached the house.

"I will give them one more chance, just one more," thought the handsome Boer, or rather half breed (for it will be remembered that his mother was English), "and if they won't take it, then let their fate be upon their own heads. To-morrow I go to the bymakaar at Paarde Kraal to take counsel with Paul Kruger and Pretorius, and the other 'fathers of the land,' as they call themselves. If I throw in my weight against rebellion there will be no rebellion; if I urge it there will be, and if Om Silas will not give me Bessie, and Bessie will not marry me, I will urge it even if it plunge the whole country in war from the Cape to Waterberg. Patriotism! Independence! Taxes!—that is what they all cry till they begin to believe it themselves. Bah! those are not the things I would go to war for; but ambition and revenge, ah! that is another thing. I would kill them all if they stood in my way, all except Bessie. If war breaks out, who will hold up a hand to help the 'verdomde Engelsmann?' They would all be afraid. And it is not my fault. Can I help it if I love that woman? I would slaughter every Englishman in the Transvaal to gain Bessie—ay! and every Boer, too, and throw all the natives in," and he laughed aloud and struck the great horse with his sjambok, making it plunge and caper gallantly.

"And then," he went on, giving his ambition wing, "when I have got Bessie, and we have kicked all these Englishmen out of the land, in a very few years I shall rule this country; and what next? Why, then I will stir up the Dutch feeling in Natal and in the old colony, and we will push the Englishmen back into the sea, make a clean sweep of the natives, only keeping enough for servants, and have a united South Africa, like that poor silly man Burgers used to prate of, but did not know how to bring about. A united Dutch South Africa, and Frank Muller to rule it! Well, such things have been, and may be again. Give me forty years of life and strength and we shall see"——

Just then he reached the veranda of the house, and, dismissing his secret ambitions from his mind, Frank Muller dismounted and entered. In the sitting room he found Silas Croft reading a newspaper.

"Good day, Om Silas," he said, extending his hand.

"Good day, Meinheer Frank Muller," replied the old man, coldly, for John had told him of the incident at the shooting party which had so nearly ended fatally, and though he had made no remark he had formed his own conclusions.

"What are you reading in The Volkstem, Om Silas—about the Bezuidenhout affair?"

"—: what was that?"

"It was that the volk are rising against you English, that is all. The sheriff seized Bezuidenhout's wagon in execution of taxes, and put it up to sale at Potchefstroom. But the volk kicked the auctioneer off the wagon and hunted him round the town; and now Governor Lanyon is sending Raaf down with power to swear in special constables and enforce the law at Potchefstroom. He might as well try to stop a river by throwing stones. Let me see, the big meeting at Paarde Kraal was to have been on the fifteenth of December, now it is to be on the eighth, and then we shall see if it will be peace or war."

"Peace or war!" answered the old man, testily. "That has been the cry for years. How many big meetings have there been since Shepstone annexed the country? Six, I think. And what has come of it all? Just nothing but talk. And what can come of it? Suppose the Boers did fight, what would the end of it be? They would be beaten, and a lot of people would be killed, and that would be the end of it. You don't suppose that England would give into a handful of Boers, do you? What did Gen. Wolseley say the other day at the dinner at Potchefstroom? Why, that the country would never be given up, because no government, Conservative, Liberal or Radical, would dare to do such a thing. And now this new Gladstone government has telegraphed the same thing, so what is the use of all the talk and childishness? Tell me that, Frank Muller."

Muller laughed as he answered, "You are all very simple people, you English. Don't you know that a government is like a woman who cries 'No, no, no,' and kisses you all the time? If there is noise enough, your British government will eat its words and give Wolseley and Shepstone and Bartle Frere and Lanyon, and all of them, the lie. This is a bigger business than you think for, Om Silas. Of course all these meetings and talk are got up. The people are angry because of the English way of dealing with the natives, and because they have to pay taxes; and they think that, now that you English have paid their debts and smashed up Sikukuni and Cetewayo, they would like to have the land back. They were glad enough for you to take it at first; now it is another matter. But still that is not much. If they were left to themselves nothing would come of it except talk, for many of them are very glad that the land should be English. But the men who pull the strings are down in the Cape. They want to drive every Englishman out of South Africa. When Shepstone annexed the Transvaal he turned the scale against the Dutch element and broke up the plans they have been laying for years to make a big anti-English republic of the whole country. If the Transvaal remains English there is an end of their hopes, for only the free state remains, and that is hemmed in. That is why they are so angry; and that is why their tools are stirring the people up. They mean to make them fight now, and I think that they will succeed. If the Boers win the day they will declare themselves; if not, you will hear nothing of them, and the Boers will bear the brunt of it. They are very cunning people, the Cape 'patriots,' but they look well after themselves."

Silas Croft looked troubled and made no answer, and Frank Muller rose and stared out of the window.

CHAPTER XIII.

FRANK MULLER SHOWS HIS HAND.

Presently Muller turned round. "Do you know why I have told you this, Om Silas?" he asked.

"No."

"Because I want you to understand that you and all the Englishmen in this country are in a very dangerous position. The war is a coming, and whether it goes for you or against you, you must suffer. You Englishmen have many enemies. You have got all the trade and own nearly half the land, and you are always standing up for the black people, whom the Boers hate. It will go hard with you if there is a war. You will be shot and your houses will be burned, and if you lose the day, those who escape will be driven out of the country. It will be the Transvaal for the Transvaalers, then, and Africa for the Africanders."

"Well, Frank Muller, and if all this should come to pass, what of it? What are you driving at, Frank Muller? You don't show me your hand like this for nothing."

The Boer laughed. "Of course I don't, Om Silas. Well, if you want to know, I will tell you what I mean. I mean that I alone can protect you and your place and people in the bad times that are coming. I have more influence in the land than you know of. Perhaps, even, I could stave off the war, and if it suited me to do so I would do it. At the least I could keep you from being harmed, that I know. But I have my price, Om Silas, as we all have, and it must be money down and no credit."

"I don't understand you and your dark sayings," said the old man, coldly. "I am a straightforward man, and if you will tell me what you mean I will give you my answer; if not, I don't see the good of our going on talking."

"Very well; I will tell you what I mean. I mean Bessie. I mean that I love your niece and want to marry her—ay, I mean to marry her by fair means or foul—and that she will have nothing to say to me."

"And what have I to do with that, Frank Muller? The girl is her own mistress. I cannot dispose of her in marriage, even if I wanted to, as though she were a colt or an ox. You must plead your own suit and take your own answer."

"I have pleaded my suit and I have got my answer," answered the Boer, with passion. "Don't you understand she will have nothing to say to me. She is in love with the d—d rooibaatje Niel, whom you have brought up here. She is in love with him, I say, and will not look at me."

"Ah," replied Silas Croft, calmly, "is that so? Then she shows very good taste, for John Niel is an honest man, Frank Muller, and you are not. Listen to me," he went on, with a sudden outburst of passion; "I tell you that you are a dishonorable man and a villain. I tell you that you murdered the Hottentot Jantje's father, mother and uncle in cold blood when you were yet a lad. I tell you that the other day you tried to murder John Niel, pretending to mistake him for a buck! And now you, who petitioned for this country to be taken over by the queen, and have gone round singing out your loyalty at the top of your voice, come and tell me that you are plotting to bring about an insurrection and to plunge the land into war, and ask me for Bessie as the price of your protection! And now I will tell you something in answer, Frank Muller," and the old man rose up, his keen eyes flashing in wrath, and straightening his bent frame, pointed toward the door. "Go out of that door and never come through it again. I rely upon God and the English nation to protect me, and not on such as you, and I would rather see my dear Bessie dead in her coffin than married to a knave and traitor and a murderer like Frank Muller. Go!"

The Boer turned white with fury as he listened. Twice he tried to speak and failed, and when the words did come they were so choked and laden with passion as to be scarcely audible. When thwarted he was liable to these accesses of rage, and they, figuratively speaking, spoiled his character. Could he have kept his head, he would have been a perfect and triumphant villain; but as it was, the carefully planned and audacious rascality of years was always apt to be swept away by the sudden gale of his furious passion. It was in such an outburst of rage that he had assaulted John in the inn yard at Wakkerstroom, and thereby put him on his guard against him and now it mastered him once more.

"Very well, Silas Croft," he said at last. "I will go; but mark this, I will come back, and when I come it shall be with men armed with rifles. I will burn this pretty place of yours, that you are so proud of, over your head, and I will kill you and your friend the Englishman, and take Bessie away, and very soon she will be glad enough to marry Frank Muller; but then I will not marry her—no, not if she goes on her knees to me—and she shall go on her knees often enough. We will then see what God and the English nation will do to protect you. God and the English nation! Call on the sheep and the horses; call on the rocks and the trees, and you will get a better answer."

"Go!" thundered the old man, "or by the God you blaspheme I will put a bullet through you," and he reached toward a rifle that hung over the mantelpiece, "or my Kaffirs shall whip you off the place."

To be Continued.

VIENNA, June 20.—The Official Gazette of to-morrow will contain an article on the Jubilee of the Queen. It will say:—"Millions of voices throughout her world-wide Empire will extol the queenly and womanly virtues of Victoria. The day marks a long epoch in the political welfare of her realm. The whole world sympathizes with the festival, for the fame of the Queen's blessed rule reaches every quarter of the globe. The sympathy is most cordially shared in by Austria's sovereign. The virtues of Queen Victoria throughout the whole of her life recall those of our own great Empress Maria Theresa.

SELF-APPOINTED PARTISANS.

Very little in our opinion is to be expected from Mr. Mercier's pet project of an inter-provincial conference composed of self-appointed delegates. It will be at best composed of men of one party, and its partisan character will create a prejudice against it in the minds of a majority of the people of the Dominion which will effectually prevent their giving that consideration to its decisions and suggestions to which, perhaps, they may be entitled. The Montreal Star (Ldep.)

DESERVED CONFIDENCE.

The Position of the Government on the Fishery question, as explained by Sir John Macdonald in the House of Commons last evening, is one which will command the confidence of the country.—Montreal Witness (Reform.)

Fresh arrivals at Turnbull's: Cream and Navy Sateen Prints, with Colored Polka Dots, the nicest goods in the market.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

"Some said, 'John, print it,' others said 'Not so,'
Some said, 'It might do good,' others said, 'No.'"

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

A Crush.

On Jubilee Day a grand stand in the Riverside Park, holding about fifteen hundred people, collapsed in the centre and about three hundred people fell to the ground. A good deal of flurry and noise followed, but no one was hurt.

Under the Gaslight

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

A Garden Party

Will be held at the Barnardo Home, on Monday evening, June 27th. Contributions of cake and fruit are solicited. Anything left at the Metropolitan Grocery will be delivered. 3d138

Chancery Sittings.

The autumn Chancery Sittings will open in Peterborough on Wednesday, September 21st, and in Lindsay on Tuesday, September 27th. Mr. Justice Robertson will be the presiding Judge.

Strawberry Festival.

On Friday evening, in the Drill Shed, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society and Mission Band of George Street Church. The Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance. Admission to drill shed 10 cts. Bouquets given away.

Durham Field Battery.

The Durham Field Battery, now in camp at Kingston, is under command of Major McLean, Capt. Sanderson, Lieuts. Twigg and Milligan, Surgeon Brereton, Quartermaster Snider, Sergt.-Major Metheral-Sergts. Trew, Pierce and Henderson. There are 68 men, four guns and 30 horses in the battery.

Conservatory of Music.

Appearing elsewhere in these columns our readers will find an advertisement of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, the first institute of this kind in Canada, and one whose objects and plans for the furtherance of music must commend themselves to everyone interested in the Art. 1d145

Gospel Meetings.

Messrs. Irving and Marshal, evangelists, have announced a series of Gospel meetings in a tent to be erected on George street on a lot opposite Mr. P. Hamilton's foundry. Services will begin on Sunday, the 26th inst., at 4 and 8 o'clock p. m., and every evening in the week at 8 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Jubilee Dots.

At the arch erected by Messrs. Porter Bro.'s at the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer streets the progress made in fifty years was set forth in a very distinct and humorous way. At one side of the arch was a rig of the style ancient, most ancient. This represented 1837. At the other side was one of Messrs. Porter Bro.'s neat, well built buggies, representing the latter part of the 19th century.

Owing to a misunderstanding many of the events down on the regatta programme did not come off. It was at one time thought that owing to the wet weather it would be postponed, and this disconcerted the plans laid. A first class regatta for Dominion Day is promised, however.

The Peterborough Troop of Cavalry went off to camp on Jubilee day, Col. Harry Rogers in command.

Decoration Day.

The now annual "Decoration Day" of the Oddfellows promises this year to be of a more interesting character than ever before. Extensive preparations have been made by the two Lodges of Peterborough and the Encampment. Such a large attendance of the members is expected that they will march four deep instead of two as heretofore, a new feature which will improve the appearance of the procession. The public are invited to assist by decorating the graves of their own departed, or by leaving flowers (specifying the Lodge for which they are intended) at H. Long's confectionery store on George street, on Monday evening, June 27th, or Tuesday morning. The procession will leave the Central Park at 2 o'clock, and proceed to our beautiful Little Lake Cemetery to pay this appropriate tribute to the memory of those who have found in it their last resting place.

Ladies' and children's parasols cheap, an extensive range to select from at Turnbull's.

THE TOWN COUNCIL.

THE BRIDGE DEBENTURE BY-LAW READ A SECOND TIME.

A Vote to be Taken on July 28th—Reports From the Finance, Fire, Water and Light, and License Committees.

A meeting of the Town Council was held on Monday evening.

PRESENT—His Worship Mayor Stevenson in the chair, and Councillors McNaughton, Davidson, Cahill, McNeil, Kelly, Stenson, Douglas, Moore, Yelland, Kendry, Menzies and Hartley.

The minutes of the meetings of May 30th and June 6th were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From the Rev. J. W. S. Beck and the Churchwardens of St. John's Church, inviting the Council to the Jubilee service in that church.—The invitation was accepted.

From R. H. Adams, Acting Chief Constable, recommending the appointment of six special constables for Jubilee day.—Received and appointments made.

From Hatton & Wood, on behalf of R. A. Morrow, calling attention to the state of the George street sewer and making suggestions as to the remedy.—Street and Bridge Committee.

From Henry Rossiter, in regard to the Acting Chief of Police, charging (1) that since May 21 he had placed in the Acting Chief's hands 28 informations of violations of the Scott Act and in 19 of these cases he laid charges for first offendes when they had been previously convicted, by which the town lost $950; (2) that the Acting Chief had informations in his hands from May 28th that had not been acted on; (3) that warrants had remained in his hands for months unexecuted, and (4) that drunken men frequently appeared on the streets, especially on Sunday, without being arrested.—Police Supervision Committee.

From E. B. Wilson, asking for remission of taxes on his factory that was burned.—Court of Revision.

From Geo. E. Williams, Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, asking that the Association's rooms be exempt from taxes.—Court of Revision.

From the Rev. E. F. Torrance and eleven others, asking that the gas and water service be extended on Reid and King streets.—Fire, Water and Light Committee.

From W. Metheral and 28 others, asking for an electric light at the corner of [illegible] Water Committee.

From H. Hetherington and John Bradfield, applying for a position on the police force.—Police Supervision Committee.

From John Grady and 15 others, asking to have Park street south from G. T. R. track graded and water tabled.—Street and Bridge Committee.

From the Nicholls Hospital Trust, stating the amount required for May, namely $93.95. The expenditure was $148.45 and revenue $54.50.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Councillor DAVIDSON read the following report of the Finance Committee:—

To the Mayor and Councillors of the Town of Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN.—Your Finance Committee beg leave to report and recommend the payment of the following accounts:—

J. Braden	$52 00
M. Halpin	22 50
McAndrew & Noble (when certified)	3 02
R. Duncan (when certified)	4 02

Your Committee would also recommend that the by-law be amended by making the amount $20,000, bearing interest on debentures at 4 per cent. per annum and to run for twenty years from the date of issue.

That the Clerk be instructed to write the Uxbridge Organ Co. that they will exempt them from taxes for a period of ten years, and furnish them a suitable site for their buildings rent free, and your Committee are of opinion that the situation of the ground they offer, situated between the angle of the C. P. R. and G. T. Railways, is equal to a bonus of at least $10,000.

Your Committee would recommend a grant of $200 to repair the P. P. Home buildings, but are of the opinion that it would be unwise to spend $550 in heating an old building such as the one they occupy.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
R. S. DAVIDSON,
Chairman.

June 20, 1887.

The report was adopted.

FIRE, WATER AND LIGHT.

Councillor MCNEIL read the report of the Fire, Water and Light Committee as follows:—

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN,—Your Fire, Water and Light Committee find that 48 hydrants have been placed in position by the P. Water Co. in accordance with contract, and find that 12 others require to be still placed to complete the same, and would recommend that they be placed as follows:—At the corner of Dublin and Aylmer streets, Edinburgh and Aylmer, Smith and Aylmer on Smith, Queen and Hunter, south side of Benson street on Smith street, corner of Wolfe and Steward south side of Wolfe, Dalhousie street immediately west of the creek, corner of Aylmer and Dalhousie, Dalhousie and Stewart, Harvey and McDonell, Argyle and Water, and King and Reid, allowing the one on the corner of London and Division streets to remain.

We would also recommend that hydrants be placed at the corner of Murray and College, and corner of Brock and Sheridan streets, providing the County Council bear one half their cost and that the Clerk ask them to comply with this proposition.

The the petition of G. D. Mitchell and 13 others asking for a hydrant on McDonell street be referred to the Peterborough Water Co. ordering them to comply with the prayer of the petition in accordance with the terms of the by-law.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
ANDREW MCNEIL,
Chairman.

The report was adopted.

LICENSES.

Councillor MCNEIL submitted the following report of the License Committee:—

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN,—Your License Committee beg leave to report and recommend:

That A. Kennedy and J. Carr be refunded rebate on eating house licenses for unexpired time.

That the constables be directed to see that better order is preserved at the fruit stands on the street and that the parties owning such stands be notified to keep the immediate surroundings in a more cleanly condition.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
ANDREW MCNEIL,
Chairman.

The report was adopted.

DEBENTURE BY-LAW.

On motion of Councillor Moore, a By-law to issue debentures for $20,000 was read a first time. The money is to construct permanent bridges over the creek on Brock, Simcoe, Charlotte and other streets, and also the locks bridge, and for the cribbing of Crescent street. The debentures are to run twenty years and bear four per cent. interest. A vote of the duly qualified ratepayers of the town will be taken on the By-law on Thursday, July 28th.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the By-law, Councillor Douglas in the chair, and it was passed clause by clause.

The committee rose and reported, and the Council adjourned until Monday, June 27th.

JUBILEE.

The Programme of Tuesday to be Completed on July 1st.

On account of the rain preventing the carrying out of the jubilee celebration programme in its entirety it has been decided that the celebration be repeated on July 1st, Dominion Day.

At a meeting of the Celebration Committee, held on Wednesday evening to discuss the advisability of repeating the programme it was unanmiously resolved that the repetition take place.

At nine o'clock in the morning the children will leave the drill shed accompanied by the Fire Brigade Band and 57th Battalion and will proceed to the Riverside Park, where the choruses will be sung.

In the afternoon the regatta on the Little Lake will be held.

All the decorations, including the arches, will be left where they are, also the electric light and gas illuminating devices.

The children are requested to keep their programmes and flags for use on Dominion Day.

Those who donated prizes are to be requested to allow them to be competed for on Dominion day. Those who have been asked to do so have willingly complied.

July 1st will be a gala day in town. In addition to the repeating of the jubilee celebration there will be lacrosse and cricket matches and other sports.

A BLACK BANQUET.

PARIS, June 22.—The Irish revolutionists celebrated the Queen's Jubilee by giving a black banquet at a resturant in Belleville yesterday. The room was decorated with Irish, American and French flags, and on the mantelpiece lay an effigy of the Queen, with a banner appended bearing the word "Vengeance." Speeches were made advocating the union of England's enemies.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

FREAKS OF LIGHTNING.

A Scythe Thrown from a Man's Shoulder Kills a Cow.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 23.—A heavy thunder storm came up while Charles Kinzleman was cutting grass for his cow on Col. J. H. Dick's farm near Fredericksburg, on Saturday. He had tied the animal [illegible] away, tethered by a rope. Kinzleman started for the house with his scythe on his shoulder. He had taken but a step or two when there came a flash of lightning, and he felt his scythe jerked violently from his hand. On looking around he saw his cow lying on the ground with the scythe blade buried in her side. Kinzleman felt no shock. The cow was dead, but whether killed by the lightning or by the scythe, which had evidently been struck by the lightning and hurled against her, is not known, as no marks were found upon her except the wound made by the scythe blade.

James Smyth, of Marion, Indiana County, during the same storm took refuge in his barn. He sat down near two horses, and in a shed adjoining were three pigs. A blinding flash of lightning came and the horses and the pigs fell dead. Smyth was not harmed. The strange part of the occurrence was that no marks could be found on the animals, and no evidence was apparent anywhere that lightning had struck the barn or shed.

EXPLOSION IN A MINE.

Bringing Out the Dead Bodies—How the Accident Happened Not Known.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 23.—An explosion of gas occurred at No. 4 sloop, of the Susquehanna coal company's mines, this morning. Three miners were killed and several men and boys seriously injured.

The accident was caused by an explosion of gas, in what manner no one will in all probability ever know. At eight o'clock last night a gang of men who were engaged in driving a gangway in the slope, entered the mine, and this morning were brought out by their comrades, three dead and the others so badly burned that their lives are despaired of.

The probabilities are that all of the injured except one will die. One died at noon. The others are unconscious and may die at any moment. It is believed by those who were at work in the mine at the time of the accident, that the gas was set on fire by a powder explosion from the fact that several kegs of powder are missing.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Collapse of a C. P. R. Bridge Under a Moving Train.

LONDON, Ont., June 22.—At the C. P. R. train due here at 6.20 p. m. was crossing the bridge over the ravine at Thorndale this evening the approaches at both ends simultaneously gave way. The train, which was going slowly at the time, was promptly stopped just as it had reached the centre of the bridge. The train men tried to repair the damage but failed. Meantime rigs had been procured, and the passengers were driven to Thorndale. A telegram was sent to this city for an engine and passenger car, on the arrival of which the passengers got on board, arriving here about four hours behind time. The break was owing to the action of the recent heavy rains. At last accounts the train was still on the bridge.

Big Failure in London.

LONDON, Ont., June 23.—David Darvill & Co., founders and manufacturers of machinery, have failed. The Sheriff has advertised the property for sale. The liabilities will reach $75,000 and assets about the same. The Molsons Bank is interested to about $40,000, secured by collaterals. The Bank of British North America is also a creditor. A large number of parties who paid their notes once, but neglected to get them returned, will have to pay them a second time, as the Molsom Bank holds them.

Died of Hydrophobia.

NEW YORK, June 23.—Mathew Guaney, of Haverstraw, after a night of great agony, died this morning of hydrophobia. He was 60 years old, unmarried and wealthy.

JUBILEE GIFTS

Some of the Presents that Have Been Presented to Queen Victoria.

LONDON, June 23.—At the afternoon reception at Buckingham Palace yesterday the Queen received numerous addresses and gifts. The women's gift of £7,500 was subscribed to erect in Windsor a replica of the famous Glasgow equestrian statue of the Prince Consort. The Queen will lay the foundation stone of the new statue on July 14th. Any surplus remaining will be devoted to some charitable object. Lady Stafford made the presentation. The donors include nearly all of the titled ladies of the kingdom, many of whom were present. The German Crown Prince, on behalf of the Emperor William, presented a marble slab upon which is carved the arms of Germany and medallions of the Emperor and Empress. The King of the Belgians presented a beautifully figured silver cup, two feet high. The King of Denmark gave a china vase painted by one of the foremost artists. The Queen of Hawaii presented a feather screen. The Prince of Wales gave an oil painting. Numerous other presents were received from town corporations, public bodies, etc., throughout Great Britain. At Windsor the Queen unveiled a statue of herself, the gift of the citizens of Windsor, in the presence of an immense gathering.

AN ABSCONDER ARRESTED.

Parent, the Absconding Hochelaga Bank Cashier, in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, June 22.—A. D. Parent, the absconding cashier of the Hochelaga Bank, of Montreal, was arrested in this city yesterday, and is held on a warrant charging him with having stolen funds and securities of the bank in his possession. He is charged with embezzling over $20,000 of the bank's funds. The Montreal authorities and the bank officials first traced the fugitive to Chicago, and from there to this city. He had been here four or five days when arrested.

An attorney from Montreal and one of the bank directors were here to-day busily engaged on the case, and as a result this afternoon it was stated that some $20,000 in money, drafts, etc., had been recovered. Parent cannot be taken back under the extradition laws, but can be prosecuted here for having the stolen securities in his possession.

Fiery Southerners.

RICHMOND, Va., June 23.—General Jubal A. Early has published a letter replying to General Rosser's recent remark that Early had no excuse for burning Chambersburg and ought to be hanged if he should visit the place now. General Early justifies the burning of the place as a retaliation for similar acts by Federal generals. Referring to General Rosser, General Early says he has disregarded the truth, falsified history, figured as a cosummate ass, and, having accumulated property in the North by means best known to himself, is convinced that the south was wrong. Judas Iscariot, at least, had the decency to throw away his ill-gotten gains and go and hang himself, but General Rosser says General Early, makes no atonement for his treachery to Southern sentiments.

Masonic Convention.

CHICAGO, June 23.—A convention of the present and past Grand Masters of the different Masonic jurisdictions of the United States and Canada began here yesterday. The object is to secure a closer and more harmonious working of the various jurisdictions. An entirely new organization may be formed, which will have final authority over the highest lodges now existing. About one hundred and fifty delegates are present.

Mr. Beecher's Successor.

NEW YORK, June 23.—Since the Rev. Mr. Stowe, Mrs. Harriet B. Stowe's son, and Mr. Beecher's nephew, occupied the pulpit in Plymouth Church last Sunday, there has been considerable discussion going on in the congregation as to his qualification to become the successor of his famous uncle. There is said to be little doubt but that he will be selected as the pastor at Plymouth.

Tried for a Brutal Murder.

BOSTON, June 23.—The trial of James E. Nowlin for the murder of his employer, George A. Codman, at Somerville on January 4th, was begun to-day. Nowlin, it will be remembered, killed Codman with a knife and then chopped the body up with an axe and deposited the portions along the Lexington road, where they were discovered the next day.

Position for Sir Ambrose.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., June 23.—Henry Arthur Blake, Governor of the Bahamas, has been appointed Governor-General of the Newfoundland. Sir Ambrose Shea is appointed Governor of the Bahamas at a salary of £2,600 sterling. Governor Des Vœux leaves to-day en route for Hong Kong.

"Some said, 'John, print it,' others said 'Not so,'
Some said, 'It might do good,' others said, 'No.'"

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT

FIRST SESSION OF THE SIXTH CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

The Tariff Bill—The Opposition once More Freetraders—The Voters' Lists—Ship Labourers.

WEDNESDAY, June 22nd.—A number of bills received their third reading.

TARIFF BILL.

Sir R. CARTWRIGHT, on the motion for the third reading of the Tariff Bill, made a speech complaining that the bill increased protection of Canadian industry and attacking the N. P. in his old style.

For several hours member after member of the Opposition abused the tariff policy adopted by the people of Canada, and then the third reading was passed

DOMINION FRANCHISE.

Mr. MILLS, on the motion for the second reading of the Franchise Amendment Bill, urged that the lists should be revised whenever a protest had been entered.

Mr. THOMPSON declined, and after a short discussion the second and third readings were passed.

SHIP LABOURERS.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of the bill as to the ship labourers. He struck out the clause as to punishment of intimidation except by violence or threats of it. This change had the approval of the representative of the Quebec ship labourers.

RELEASE.

Mr. THOMPSON, in reply to Mr. Mills, said he had advised the release of Mr. Maguire before the expiration of his term of imprisonment for libelling Mr. Langelier in consequence of a recommendation from the judge and a report from the gaol surgeon that Maguire was suffering from ill health.

SUPPLY.

The House then went into Committee of Supply.

Ladies' and children's parasols cheap, an extensive range to select from at Turnbull's.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

Held in the Court House—Addresses in the Opera House.

On Thursday a Teachers' Institute was opened in the Court House at ten o'clock in the forenoon. Mr. J. Coyle Brown, County School Inspector, presided. There was a good representation of the teachers of the County and a number from the town present.

The Auditing Committee was appointed, and a report was brought in in the afternoon which showed a small balance in hand.

In the afternoon at two o'clock Mr. J. A. McLellan, LL.D., Director of Teachers' Institutes, gave a very instructive address on the subject of reading.

A paper was read by Mr. Hutchinson, of Norwood, on Hopkins' "Outline Study of Man."

In the evening a public meeting was held in Bradburn's Opera House. There were about two hundred people present. Mr. H. Hough, M.A., read an address entitled "The Martyrs of Scholarship," in which he gave brief biographies of some of the celebrated scholars, and rehearsed the persecutions to which they were subjected.

Mr. J. A. McLELLAN followed, and for an hour spoke in a highly interesting manner. He gave excellent advice to both parents and teachers. To the latter he emphasized the importance of sympathizing with the pupils. He told of how a few kind words spoken to him when a boy by his teacher had left an impress upon him which was as fresh to-day as the day upon which the words were spoken. He dwelt on the school system of Ontario for a time, and eulogized the system as being one which gave equality of opportunity.

A vote of thanks to the speakers was moved by Mr. Dumble, seconded by the Rev. F. H. Wallace, and carried unanimously.

H. S. Griffin & Co. returned yesterday from the city, where they were hunting up bargains in dry goods and millinery. It's wonderful the goods they have. See their prints at the door, and see their black grenadine for 5c. a yard. Tell all your friends that Griffin & Co. are going in for big drives in special bargains every week. d145

Postponed.

On account of the dampness of the drill shed and the change of weather, the strawberry festival in aid of the George Street Methodist Church has been postponed.

The Break in Stocks.

NEW YORK, June 23.—The break in stocks is generally believed to be a sequel to the wheat panic in Chicago, and bankers believe that if the rumours regarding the weakness of banking institutions in Boston and Chicago, resulting from the failure of the Fidelity Bank of Cincinnati, should prove unfounded, the course of prices would tend upward at once.

Another Railway Wreck.

KANSAS CITY, June 23.—A Sedalia special reports a disastrous freight wreck on the Missouri Pacific RR., near that place. Last night 18 cars were burned and the loss will exceed $50,000.

Leadership of the Opposition.

OTTAWA, June 23.—Mr. Laurier to-day communicated to Mr. Scriver, chairman of the Opposition caucus, his acceptance of the position of Leader of the Reform party.

Davis' Pain-Killer is the best medicine in the world for all Diseases of the Bowels.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

ANGLO-TURKISH CONVENTION.

LONDON, June 23.—A hastily summoned Cabinet meeting was held to day to consider the hitch in regard to the Anglo-Turkish convention in reference to Egypt. The Secretary of War abandoned his intention to be present at the review of troops at Aldershot in order to attend the Council. The Government are irritated at the opposition to the convention on the part of France and Russia.

A MILITARY REVIEW.

LONDON, June 23.—The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Kings of Greece, Denmark, Belgium and Saxony, the Crown Prince of Germany, and several other princes, and Lord Wolseley and the Duke of Cambridge, reviewed 12,000 troops at Aldershot to-day. The weather was clear and sunny.

THE QUEEN HAPPY.

LONDON, June 23.—The Queen is very happy over the brilliant success of her Jubilee celebration.

THE CAMPOS ELOPEMENT.

PARIS, June 23.—The Government officials named Pascal and Gleheneuc have been suspended for being connected with the Campos affair. All efforts to trace the fugitives at Brussels have failed. The alleged "Count" who has run off with the heiress proves to be an imposture.

A RUSSIAN FORCE IN BOKHARA.

BOMBAY, June 23.—A Russian force has arrived at Karatagin. It is supposed that the destination of the force is Badakshan. The Bokhares, in spite of orders from the Ameer of Bokhara, refuse to allow the Russians to proceed.

RAILWAY DISASTER.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., June 23.—By the wrecking of a train on the Hawkesbury Railway to-day seven persons were killed and forty injured. The accident was caused by the failure of the brakes to work while the train was going down an incline.

FOREIGN CONSULS' BANQUET.

LONDON, June 23.—United States Consul General Waller presided at the Jubilee banquet given to-night at the Hotel Metropoli by the foreign consuls in London. Two hundred persons were present, including representatives of forty nations.

THE GREEN FLAG HAULED DOWN.

DUBLIN, June 23.—William Murphy, Nationalist Member of Parliament, while sailing in his yacht in Bantry Bay yesterday with a party of friends, hoisted a small green flag. The captain of H. M. S. Shannon, upon noticing this action, sent a party of marines to the yacht with orders to haul down the flag and carry it off. These instructions were obeyed. It is expected that as a protest against this act of the captain of the Shannon, the Bantry regatta, which had been fixed for Monday, will be postponed until the Shannon leaves the bay.

O'BRIEN SPEAKS.

DUBLIN, June 23.—United Ireland says: "Ireland is the only civilized country in the world which did not share in the jubilee celebration. She stood sternly and sorrowfully aloof. Ireland's place ought to have been beside England at the throne. Irish blood and brain helped to build the empire. Poverty, misery and slavery are her rewards. She shared England's labors, but she may not share her triumphs. England's joy is for fifty years of liberty, prosperity and progress. The Irish grief and wrath are for fifty years of misery, famine and oppression. England is cumbered by the struggles of a sullen captive, when she might purchase by justice the aid and comfort of a friend."

THE CRIMES ACT.

DUBLIN, June 23.—The annual meeting of Catholic archbishops and bishops was held at Maynooth College to-day. Archbishop Walsh presided. A resolution was passed again denouncing the coercion measure before Parliament.

TO VISIT COPENHAGEN.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 23.—It is nearly certain that the Czar and Czarina will before long visit Copenhagen, and that from there the Czar will go to meet the Emperor William and perhaps the Emperor Francis Joseph.

THE MANCHESTER CANAL.

LONDON, June 23.—The Rothschilds and Barings will issue four million pounds preference shares of the Manchester Canal Company, providing Parliament passes the bill authorizing the issue.

RETALIATION.

PARIS, June 23.—In the Chamber of Deputies to-day MM. Dreyfus and Wickersheimer introduced a bill providing penalties for foreigners resident in France who belong to anti-French societies abroad.

A MAYOR REMOVED.

CORK, June 23.—In consequence of the action of the Mayor of Cork in hoisting a black flag on the occasion of the jubilee and because of his having shown favor to the Nationalists, Mr. Plunkett, the divisional magistrate, has superceded him, and has ordered that only a resident paid magistrate shall try prisoners.

THE CROWN PRINCE.

LONDON, June 23.—The Lancet says: "The Crown Prince Fredrick William of Germany, is enjoying excellent health. The appearance of the larynx is quite satisfactory. There is no conjestion, the ventricular bands are slightly relaxed. A solution of per chloride of iron has been applied on several occasions. It is probable that more of the growth will be removed early next week."

Triple Crime of an Insane Man.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., June 23.—James Carey, a farmer of Union County, yesterday, while intoxicated, killed Rufus Smith, his father-in-law, with a shovel, and then beat his wife so badly with the shovel that her recovery is doubtful. An attempt at suicide has rendered Carey insensible, and his death is momentarily expected. The murderer has been insane at times, but was not considered dangerous.

Struck by Lightning.

ELMBERG, Ont., June 23.—A heavy rain storm passed over this vicinity yesterday evening, accompanied by hail and lightning. A large frame barn and outbuildings belonging to Wm. Capner was struck by lightning and totally consumed by fire. A number of farm implements owned by the tenant, James Farr, were also destroyed. There was no insurance on the buildings or implements.

The Superiority of the "Royal Flavoring Extracts," is purity and strength.

The Daily Review

FRIDAY, JUNE 24, 1887.

IMPORTANCE OF THE FARM.

THOSE who are now foremost in advocating commercial union urge strongly the great importance of the farming industry. Sometimes, however, they make one mistake. They speak as though there was an opposition to the farmers and as though the importance of their industry was denied. All, we believe, not only admit but feel that it is one of the most important industries in the country and that unless the farming community are prosperous the country will not progress. It is not by any means because that great industry is not given its proper place that commercial union is opposed, but those who refuse to countenance the union agitation do it believing that they are acting in the interests of the farmers as much as of any other class in the community. The REVIEW believes that the farmers would be injured by such a union, and not benefitted.

An argument used by a speaker a short time ago has since been frequently repeated. It was that the produce of the farm made up the greater part of the exports of Canada. This certainly shows the importance of the industry, but does it prove that commercial union would benefit the farmers? There is now more farm produce grown in Canada than is required for home consumption, and the Canadian farmers therefore have to export and be dependent on foreign markets and on the demand in other countries. With commercial union there would be less manufacturing in Canada and a more limited home market, leaving the farmers still more at the mercy of foreign markets and carriers, and in a position in which the supplies of other countries would effect them to a greater extent. Besides, they would have competition in the home markets still left them from the wheat growers and other farmers of the States. The true policy in the interests of the farmers of Canada, as well as of the whole Dominion, is to build up our own country, foster its manufactures and increase its population, thus providing work for mechanics and a home market for the farmers. The more capacious the home market, and the less dependent they are on foreign countries, the better it will be for the farmers. If the Canadians townsare depopulated or partially so; the value of Canadian farms will depreciate and the price paid for farm produce will be lowered. These facts appear self-evident, and the farmers of Canada should consider them well before being led away by interested outsiders who desire to capture, not only the Canadian market, but the whole Canadian Dominion.

It would be a fine thing for the United States to have Canada commercially annexed to it, so that it could make the Canadian tariff on British goods, while there would be no duty on United States goods. The tariff on articles coming from Britain or other countries would be higher than now. This would neutralize to the farmers or consumers any benefit they might derive from free imports from the United States, while it would give that country a free field in Canada for such goods at it manufactures. That would be a good thing for the United States, but how Canada would be benefitted, or how any important class of Canadians, farmers or others, would be materially benefitted by it is not so plain, while it is obvious that the country would be injured and that our connection with the great British Empire would be severed.

TRENT VALLEY NAVIGATION.

WE have just been celebrating with due honour the Jubilee of our Sovereign. This occasion has very naturally recalled from oblivion the memory of events of fifty years ago. The people have been "taking stock" as it were, and seeing how they stood at the beginning of the half century of the present reign.

A glance at the estimates for 1837 shows that money was then appropriated for the improvement of the Trent Valley Navigation. It will thus be seen that this important public work, in which our readers take so much interest, is no new project, but its value was recognized fifty years ago when our beloved Queen, then a young girl, ascended the throne of her ancestors, and began her reign over the even then wide territories of the British Empire, including what has since become the great Dominion of Canada. For a long time the prosecution of the improvement of the Trent Valley Navigation was allowed to drop. This was because other matters, considered at the moment more pressing, forced it into the background, among them being the somewhat mistaken expenditure on the great canals of the St. Lawrence waters, which, through the error of first enlarging them above instead of below, have so far chiefly conduced to facilitate and encourage the commerce of the United States instead of that of Canada, thought at our expense.

This discontinuance for a time of the improvement of the navigation of the chain of nland waters on which our town is situated, was not caused by any change rendering the work of less value than was formerly supposed. There has been a change, but it has been of a nature to make the early opening of the Trent Valley Navigation more urgent than before. Canada in 1837 had no Northwest provinces and territories open for settlement and pouring down to our seaports a rapidly increasing volume of produce. For this produce the Trent Valley Navigation will be an invaluable outlet, bearing it onwards to our own ports, and not to those of our neighbors.

Though unfortunately no new work is to be undertaken this year, we trust that the year of the Jubilee of our Queen will see the present heavy contracts thoroughly completed, and that the enquiry, which we are told is for the purpose of deciding which section shall be next undertaken, will result in a decision that will cause substantial progress to be recommenced next year.

At her Majesty's accession Canada was engaged on this improvement, and we hope the year of her Jubilee will see it take a fresh start.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING
EPPS'S COCOA
BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette."

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc.

Frank Muller waited for no more. He turned and went. It was dark now, but there was still some light in the sky at the end of the blue gum avenue, and as he rode away against it he made out Bessie's tall and graceful form softly outlined upon the darkening night. John had left her to see about some pressing matter connected with the farm, and there she stood, filled with the great joy of a woman who has found her love, and loath as yet to break its spell by entering again into the daily round of common life.

There she stood, a type and symbol of all that is beautiful and gracious in this rough world, the lovelight shining in her blue eyes and thoughts of happy gratitude to the Giver of all good rising from her heart to heaven, drawn up thither, as it were, by the warmth of her pure passion, as the dew mists of the morning are drawn upward by the sun.

Presently she heard the horse's hoofs, and looked up, so that the faint light fell full upon her face, idealizing it and making its passion breathing beauty seem more of heaven than of earth. There was some look upon it, some indefinable light that day—such is the power that love has to infuse all human things with the tint of his own splendor—that it went even to the heart of the wild and evil man who adored her with the deep and savage force of his dark nature. For a moment he paused, half regretful, half afraid. Was it well to meddle with her and to build up plans for her overthrow and that of all she clung to? Would it not be better to let her be, to go his way and leave her to go hers, in peace? She did not look quite like a woman standing there, but more like something belonging to another world, some subject of a higher power. Men of powerful but undisciplined intellect like Frank Muller are never entirely free from superstition, however free they may be from religion, and he grew superstitious, as he was apt to do. Might there not be an unknown penalty for treading such a flower as that into the mire—into mire mixed perchance with the blood of those she loved?

For a few seconds he hesitated. Should he throw up the whole thing, leave the rebellion to look after itself, marry one of Hans Coetzie's daughters, and trek to the Old Colony, or Bechuanaland, or anywhere? His hand began to tighten on his bridle rein and the horse to answer to the pressure. As a first step toward it he would turn away to the left and avoid her, when suddenly the thought of his successful rival flashed into his mind. What! leave her with that man? Never! He had rather kill her with his own hand. In another second he had sprung from his horse, and, before she had guessed who it was, with the jealous strength of a powerful man he had overpowered him.

"Ah, I thought he had come after missie," said Jantje, who, pursuing his former tactics, was once more indulging his passion of slinking about behind trees and in tufts of grass. "Now what will missie say?"

"How are you, Bessie?" he said, in a quiet voice; but she, looking into his face, saw that it belied his voice. It was alive with evil passions that seemed to make it positively lurid, an effect that its undoubted beauty only intensified.

"I am quite well, thank you, Mr. Muller," she answered, as she began to move homeward, commanding her voice as well as she could, but feeling dreadfully frightened and lonely. She knew something of her admirer's character, and feared to be left alone with him, so far from any help, for nobody was about now, and they were more than 300 yards from the house.

He stood before her, so that she could not pass without actually pushing past him. "Why are you in such a hurry?" he said. "You were standing still enough just now."

"It is time for me to be getting in. I want to see about the supper."

"The supper can wait a while, Bessie, and I cannot wait, I am going off to Paarde Kraal to-morrow at daybreak, and I want to say good by to you first."

"Good by," she said, more frightened than ever at his curious, constrained manner, and she held out her hand.

He took it and held it.

"Please let me go," she said.

"Not till you have heard what I have to say. Look here, Bessie, I love you with all my heart. I know you think I am only a Boer, but I am more than that. I have been to the Cape and seen the world. I have brains, and can see and understand things, and if you will marry me I will lift you up. You shall be one of the greatest ladies in Africa, though I am only plain Frank Muller now. Great things are going to happen in the country, and I shall be at the head of them, or near it. No, don't try to get away. I tell you I love you, you don't know how. I am dying for you. Oh! can't you believe me, my darling! my darling! Yes, I will kiss you," and in an agony of passion, that her resistance only fired the more, he flung his strong arms round her and drew her to his breast, fight as she would.

But at this opportune moment an unexpected diversion occurred, of which the hidden Jantje was the cause. Seeing that matters were getting serious, and being afraid to show himself lest Frank Muller should kill him then and there, as he would indeed have been quite capable of doing, he hit upon another expedient, to the service of which he brought a ventriloquistic power which is not uncommon among natives. Suddenly the silence was broken by a frightful and prolonged wail that seemed to shape itself into the word "Frank," and to proceed from the air just above the struggling Bessie's head. The effect produced upon Muller was something wonderful.

"Allemachter!" he cried, looking up, "it is my mother's voice!"

"Frank!" wailed the voice again, and he let go of Bessie in his perplexity and fear, and turned round to try and discover whence the sound proceeded—a circumstance that the young lady took advantage of to beat a rapid if not very dignified retreat.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little suffer at once; it produces natural, quiet slee by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes 'as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and ake no other kind.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

SUGGESTIONS BY S. I. CURTISS, PH. D., D. D.

Review of the International Series (Second Quarter), for Sunday, June 26. Golden Text, Ps. cv, 43, "He Brought Forth His People with Joy."

The Schooling of the People of Redemption.—Nations, like individuals, need to go to school. Israel was to be trained in the sciences and arts of Egypt, the university of the ancient world, and afterward in theology or religion in the wilderness. Sin, misfortune and famine were the instruments in God's hands in introducing Israel to Egypt.

The Beloved Son.—Unconsciously Jacob and Joseph's brethren were co-working with God in the accomplishment of this plan. God had great things in store for Joseph, and he gave him premonitions of them. His father loved him because he was the son of his beloved wife, Rachel, and perhaps because of his goodness. For all these reasons his brethren hated him, because of his superiority, his goodness and his father's love, and they were ready to kill him.

Joseph reminds us of that best beloved Son, whom his brethren the Jews hated because of his sinlessness, and his just claims to leadership, whom they betrayed and crucified, and who became the Saviour of the world through the sin of his own people, as Joseph became the savior of his brethren.

Joseph a Ruler.—As Jesus the sinless one suffered because of his goodness, so Joseph suffered because of his virtue. He went to prison for years rather than yield to the voice of temptation and sin against God.

But as Jesus went through the deepest shame and humiliation to a seat at the right hand of the Father, so Joseph was given a place next the king of Egypt.

Joseph and his Brethren.—There is no peace to the wicked. They are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. Joseph spent years in a prison; but we may well believe that in all those years he took more comfort than his guilty brothers. Could they ever forget his pure, pleading face as they thrust him into the pit, or the falsehood they told their father?

Before they could have forgiveness and peace, they must experience deep repentance. So we before we can have peace with God, and have the love of Christ shed abroad in our hearts, must remember that it was our sins which nailed our Savour to the cross.

Filial Love.—Joseph is an example of the love of children for parents in all times. He did all he could to make the old age of his father happy. He was thoughtful for his comfort, and was not ashamed to introduce him to the proud Pharaoh of Egypt. He rewarded all his father's love in his early years by cherishing that father in his old age, and then by honoring his memory when dead as though he had been a king.

An Enslaved People.—At last Joseph died and all his brethren. A new king arose who neither knew nor cared for him. This king looked with fear on the Israelities, who were so rapidly increasing in Goshen on the highway of his kingdom to the countries of his enemies in Palestine, the land of the Hittites, and of Assyria. He even commanded that all the male children should be slain, but under God's care the people kept increasing. The enslavement of Israel was only the way to their deliverance.

The Wonderful Babe.—Nothing is small in God's kingdom. The destinies of this world hung on the life of the babe in Bethlehem. Herod's decree was therefore powerless against him. So at an earlier period the destinies of God's chosen people were committed to a little basket, and that little basket with its precious burden was committed to the Nile, and its keeping was intrusted to a Hebrew maiden. But that child was in the keeping of the infinite God. The same hand that led the Hebrew mother to put the basket on the waters of the Nile was leading Pharaoh's daughter thither, and was preparing the way for this beautiful babe to become the son of a princess.

The leader of God's people must go to school, first among the princes of the world in Egypt, and then like his people he was to be taught of God in the awful solitudes of the wilderness.

The Burning Bush.—All human gifts are in vain for God's service without the baptism of fire and unless God reveals himself to the soul. The leaders of God's host must have a vision of the Almighty before they can perform any mighty works. Moses was versed in all the learning of the Egyptians, and had had the opportunity for meditation in the wilderness, but he was not prepared for his work until he had seen the burning bush.

The Passover.—The destroyer once stood at every door in Egypt. He passed by the doors where he saw the blood sprinkled; he entered wherever he did not see the traces of the blood, and when he came out one lay dead.

Christ our passover is slain for us. If his blood is sprinkled on our hearts we have peace with God. The destroyer cannot enter. The soul that sinneth it shall die, and we have all sinned, but the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. Through him we have redemption and the forgiveness of sins.

The Path through the Sea.—Israel delivered from one peril, was faced with another. There was the sea. But God said go forward. When he gives the word of command we are to obey, although we are encompassed with dungeon walls as Peter was, or although the sea lies before us as it did before Israel. The one that says "go forward" can open the way before us.

The Manna.—The hand that opens the way before his people can give them bread. We cannot ask anything better for ourselves than to be led of God; for if we are in the way of his providence all difficulties will disappear. We need not fear to desert if God go before us.

The Ten Commandments.—These are ten links in one chain. To break the chain it is not necessary to break every link. He that breaks one link has broken the chain. He that breaks one commandment, as Christ has shown, is guilty of all. The heart may have broken the commandments before the hands or feet or tongue have done so. Self worship is idolatry. Supreme devotion to art is image worship. Contempt of God is profanation of his name. A worldly mind on the Lord's day is Sabbath breaking. Unkind or slighting thoughts of parents constitute a failure to honor them. Hatred is murder. Lust is adultery. Desire of other's property which is only held in check by law is theft. The imputation of wrong motives to others in our thoughts without sufficient evidence is false witness. Covetousness is by its very nature a sin of the heart.

Who of us can stand before such a law and honestly say, "I have never transgressed one of these commandments?" But if we offend in one point we are guilty of all (James ii, 10).

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

1. God knows how to train us for his work.
2. God gave his only and well beloved Son to die for us.
3. No cross on earth, no crown in heaven.
4. There can be no pardon without true repentance for sin.
5. We should rejoice that we may make some return to our parents for all their love to us and care of us.
6. Only God can set the captives of sin free.
7. There is nothing insignificant in God's kingdom.
8. Servants of God must be endued with power from on high before they can have success.
9. Life comes through death. We live because Jesus died for us, and because his blood is sprinkled on our hearts.
10. There are no hindrances which God cannot remove.
11. All, whether rich or poor, should pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."
12. None but the spotless One has ever kept the Ten Commandments perfectly.—Sunday School World.

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you you may depend upon this for certain.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled. Dr. Thos. Prim, Ala., says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child eight months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Lots of Flowers

for Decoration Day. Bouquets from 25c upwards. Order now at Floral Drug Store or telephone to MASON'S greenhouse. 2d146

St. John's Church.

A strawberry festival will be held in the grounds of the Church on Thursday, 30th of June. The Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance. 6d146

Personal.

Bishop Dowling returned on Thursday from his visit to Father Browne and Father Murray. He was accompanied by Father Kelly, of Ennismore.

Auction Sale.

Don't forget the sale to-morrow, on the market square, of household furniture, horses, waggons, oilcloth horse covers, coats and caps. 1d146

The Ennismore Picnic.

Father Kelly, having heard that the Sons of England are holding an excursion to Sturgeon Point on Dominion Day, has postponed his picnic. It will likely be held in September.

Under the Gaslight

People are crowding every evening to see [illegible] at the same [illegible] Gloves, 3 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Crude Perafine.

A gentleman in the vicinity of Lakefield burned a limestone dug out of a summer fallow five feet long, three feet wide and two feet deep, and in the centre was a fossil containing crude perafine, which ignited when a match was applied.

Acknowledgment.

The lady managers of the P. P. H. desire to record their deep gratitude to the Masons for their great kindness and tenderness to the late Mr. and Mrs. Newbold, and for their thoughtful attention in numerous ways, not only during the declining days, but after death.

Lawn Social.

A lawn social was held in the Murray Street Separate School grounds on Thursday evening under the auspices of the ladies of St. Peter's Cathedral congregation. The grounds were prettily decorated, a band furnished music for those who indulged in dancing, and everything passed off pleasantly. The refreshment tables were well patronized and a handsome amount was realized.

Go and Hear "Zozo."

To-morrow night "Zozo" will be presented at the Opera House. Of it an exchange has said: "It is a clean, bright production, full of funny sayings, and happily interspersed with poetry and music, and a series of stage pictures of exceptional beauty and brilliancy, and a company largely composed of attractive ladies, who appear modest and pretty, and do nothing to offend good taste."

Garden Party.

A garden party was held at the residence of Mr. Wm. Hamilton on Thursday evening under the auspices of the Mission Band in connection with St. Paul's Church. The grounds were handsomely illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and the lawn, spread over with refreshment tables and flower tables, looked very pretty. The Fire Brigade Band was present and furnished choice music. The financial results were very satisfactoy.

Vice-Regal Visit.

In its House of Commons notes the Kingston Whig of June 22nd has the following:—"The Governor-General has decided to visit Peterborough in August next and review the Army of Patriarchs Militant which will congregate there. The local canton will accompany him as a body guard. The I. O. O. F. will run monster excursions from the capital and a large one from Montreal. Lieut.-General Underwood, of Covington, Ky., will be present and conduct the prize drill."

An Excursion.

The County Council suspended business on Thursday and took a trip to Burleigh for the purpose of inspecting the bridges. They went up to Lakefield by train, took the Fairy and had a blessant sail up the lake. It was said that the big bridge was in a dangerous condition, but on examining it the Council arrived at the conclusion that it would last for some years yet if properly repaired. The Reeves and those who went with them, arrived in town again without any mishap occurring.

Fresh arrivals at Turnbull's: Cream and Navy Sateen Prints, with Colored Polka Dots, the nicest goods in the market.

A TEST.

The Fire Department on Its Merits—The New Fire Station.

On Thursday evening Mr. J. Sutton Pell, Inspector for the Fire Underwriters' Association, was in town for the purpose of inspecting the Peterborough Fire Department. His report will decide whether Peterborough will have what it is entitled to—a higher classification.

Mr. Pell, accompained by Councillor McNeil, Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, Mr. E. E. Henderson, and representatives of the press, went to the corner of George and Simcoe streets. At twenty-seven minutes to eight an alarm was rung from the telephone in Mr Sherrin's floral drug store for the market square. In half a minute the town alarm rung; in a minute and a half a stream was playing on the market square; in two minutes two streams were playing; in three minutes three streams were playing, and water issued from the fourth nozzle in four minutes. The streams thrown were all about 130 feet high. The engine was brought out and two more streams were put on. The next test was the four hundred feet hose test. This was very satisfactory as well as the rest, the stream thrown being about 100 feet high. An 800 feet line was put on and a stream about 80 feet high was thrown. The hook and ladder was inspected and approved of, Mr. Pell being quite satisfied with the substantial build of the ladders and the appliances attached.

Since he came to town Mr. Pell drew a map of the town showing the size of the water works mains, the location of hydrants, and the distribution of telephones throughout the town. This, together with his report, will be laid before the Underwriters' Association.

The effectiveness of the department has been added to during the past week from an artistic point of view. Mr. Geo. A. Cox gave handsome wall decoration and put it on the engine room at his own expense. Mr. T. G. Hazlitt gave sufficient ash lumber to wainscott the room, sending it all ready to be put together. Mr. A. Hall contributed a water cooler, so that when the boys want a drink they are at liberty to adapt themselves to Adam's ale. Mr. W. Salisbury gave the Toronto World for the firemen's reading room, and Mr. Jas. Stevenson, M. P., gave two beautiful gasaliers to take the place of the old ones. The thanks of the firemen are due to these citizens for so liberally taking an interest in them, and to the energetic Chairman of the Committee for letting those citizens know how at small cost they could purchase the good will of the Fire Brigade.

Fresh patterns in Carpets just arrived at Turnbull's, intending purchasers should see them, they are special value.

At the Niagara Camp.

The Mail's correspondent at the Niagara military camp speaks very highly of the 31st Grey Battalion. The Mail says:—"Col. Otter is particularly well pleased with it, and remarked to Col. Brodie yesterday that with a little more drill it could be made the finest regiment in Canada. As it was he seems to think it is about the best in the district." It adds:—"No. 5, or Chatsworth company, which was so highly spoken of by Col. Denison two years ago, again carries of the palm. Col. Otter says it is by far the best company in the brigade; it is commanded by Capt. John Macdonald, with Geo. W. Bennett as Lieutenant." Lieut. Bennett is from North Monaghan, and Capt. W. E. Lech, from Peterborough, is Paymaster of the battalion. They have reason to feel proud of the battalion they are connected with.

A select stock of Millinery, Manties, Hoop-Skirts, Panniers, Bustles, &c., &c., at Turnbull's Ladies' Furnishing Store on Simcoe Street, Peterborough.

Sergeant Billings.

The Kingston Whig publishes a short biography of Sergt. Billings, now in camp at Kingston. "Sergt. C. Billings, of 'C' troop of cavalry," the Whig says, "commenced soldiering in 1837. He joined the Seventh foot imperial regiment in Guernsey and went to Gibraltar. After serving with the regiment in the West Indies he was transferred to the Seventh Huzzars in 1838 and came to Lapraire, P. Q. Billings went back to England in 1842, and in 1853 was discharged. He came to Canada and joined the Fifty-Seventh regiment at Peterborough, and after two years' service connected himself with the Third regiment of cavalry, with which he has been for eighteen years. His father was a member of the Royal Horse Guards, and was killed in the battle of Waterloo at the age of twenty-eight."

Men's Fine Black Worsted suits made to order and perfect fit guaranteed, for $16, worth $20, at Turnbull's. Canadian and Scotch tweeds proportionately cheap.

Fire.

At a few minutes to twelve o'clock on Thursday night an alarm was rung for a fire on Aylmer street, near the Canadian Pacific Railway track. The plastered house in which the fire was, was occupied by Mr. Jas. Warnes, porter at the Grand Central Hotel. The blaze had gone too far for the firemen to do any good. It being a calm night the house was allowed to burn. It was owned by Mrs. Jefferson. The origin is unknown. The loss is nominal.

Piano Tuning.

Mr. Geo. Gumpricht is in town. Order may be left at Mr. T. Menzies' book store or Messrs. Taylor & McDonald's drug store. d146

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

A CLOUD ARISING.

France and Russia's Action Regarding the Anglo-Turkish Convention.

LONDON, June 24.—The cohesion of France and Russia in opposing the ratification of England's treaty with Turkey regarding the future administration of Egyptian affairs, is rapidly assuming a menacing aspect. The Cabinet are much perturbed thereat. As far as the public are aware, the situation in respect of Russia's and France's opposition England's obstinate adherence to her original position, and Turkey's wavering between signing the convention and deferring to Russia's protests, has undergone no change, but the hurriedly summoned cabinet meeting of yesterday, at which were present many ministers, who had foregone engagements entered into weeks ago, in order to attend, implies that the Government is in receipt of information of a grave character. Surely nothing that Turkey could do or refuse to do would cause such manifest haste. Even had the question not been postponed as far as England and Turkey are concerned until after the feast of Bairam, which will begin to-day, and the public will not remain satisfied that the pressing necessity for the council did not arise from the Government's conviction that war between Russia and France on the one side and Turkey and inevitably England on the other is made imminent by the very recent and decisive action on the part of the former allied powers. This much, however, is known. Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, through whose diplomatic cajolery the treaty was brought about, fearing that the cabinet he represents may at the last moment fail to support him, has demanded an immediate decision of the questions he has submitted, and Lord Salisbury is in a quandary. Egypt and Ireland are the two horns of his dilemma. In dealing with the latter question there is no necessity for him to temporize, but in managing the former as to secure the best possible results, or indeed from the present outlook any good results at all, he is seeking to gain all the time he can, and induce all the other parties concerned to commit themselves before showing his own hand. The impatience of Special Commissioner Wolff and the determined attitude of Russia and France however are pressing him closely, and definite declaration of England's intentions in the premises cannot be much longer delayed.

NO CANADIANS WANTED.

United States Employers of Canadians to be Prosecuted.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., June 24.—The recent order of the Dominion Government to the Canadian Custom officials at Windsor to make a record of all Americans residing at Detroit and vicinity who daily cross the line to engage in work in Canada has led to a counter movement by the Collector of Customs at Niagara Falls and Suspension Bridge. This morning as the Canadian laborers numbering about 200, who are engaged in employment on this side reached our frontier they were surprised to find at this end of the two suspension bridges deputies stationed by Collector Cutler, who demanded their names, ages, residence, occupation and where and by whom they were employed. During the day notices were served upon the employers of these foreigners that if they should continue to employ such foreign labor after July 1st, the United States District Attorney would be recommended to proceed against them according to law.

Anniversary Services.

The Rev. Principal Grant, D. D., of Queen's College, Kingston, will conduct the services, both morning and evening, in St. Andrew's Church, town, on Sabbath the 3rd July next. A social will be held on the Monday evening following. Addresses by Dr. Grant and others; an attractive musical programme by a trained choir; organ solos, etc., to be expected. Particulars next week.

Mr. Jas. Dawson, of the Monetary Times, Toronto, a printer of long and high standing, is in town on business connected with paper he represents.

The annual distribution of prizes at Loretto Abbey, Toronto, took place on Friday. Miss Wrighton, daughter of Mr. W. H. Wrighton, of Peterborough, was awarded the bronze medal given by His Excellency the Marquis of Lansdowne, Governor-General, for English literature.

The Kingston Whig in its camp notes says:—"Lieut-Col. Rogers, who is now in command of the third regiment of calvary, in consequence of Lt.-Col. Boulton's elevation to camp command, has been in the military a great many years. His father formed 'A' troop of the regiment. In 1832, he and eight troops, camped on the dock yard property here. He commenced soldiering, in 1855 was connected with the Peterborough rifles, and was on duty dur the Fenian invasion. Major Rogers, the great grandfather of the present Colonel, commanded a regiment known as Rogers' Rangers during the French war. Rogers the senior was authorized to organize a regiment of scouts, and sailed up the lakes in boats and took over the forts vacated by the French about 1755. A brother of Robert Rogers was in command, in 1766, of the fortifications at St. John, P. Q. Lieut Col. Rogers' grandfather, David Macgregor Rogers, had charge of the first post office between Kingston and Toronto. He sat in the Upper Canada legislature for Prince Edward county, and was afterwards member for Northumberland. Lieut.-Col. Robert Rogers, commandent of the 40th regiment, is a brother of Col. Rogers, of the cavalry, and Col. James Rogers, of the 57th battalion in Peterborough, is his cousin. The late Col. Williams, of Port Hope was his second cousin. Col. Rogers was educated in Kingston and is now postmaster at Peterborough. He was a very courteous officer and very popular with the volunteers."

A TUMBLE IN STOCKS.

Excitement on the New York Exchange—A Heavy Decline.

NEW YORK, June 24.—There is great excitement on the Stock Exchange, with a heavy decline in prices. A rumour was circulated this morning that J. Gould was dead, but it had no foundation. Gould is now in his office on Wall street. Gould's friends are all bearish, and it is believed that Gould is selling the market. Speculation on the Stock Exchange this morning became extremely active and excited with heavy declines. The market opened with a feeling of confidence in many of the stocks which suffered so severely yesterday, and large supporting orders were given all over the room. In a few moments, however, there was very heavy selling apparent, and a report was started that there had been a falling out between Jay Gould and Russell Sage and Cyrus W. Field. At the same time Berdan offered some heavy blocks of Manhattan stocks, which were taken by Wight & Co., and in a short period the sales by Berdan amounted to 7,000 shares and Wight's purchases to 11,000 shares. These sales were made at about 156, but as soon as Wight & Co.'s orders were filled the price broke to 149½, and at that point Minzesheimer & Co. had a stop order reached, and they offered the stock down 19 per cent. without making a sale. A rally did not occur until the price reached 120, a fall of 36¼ per cent. from the opening figures. The room was crowded with brokers, and the decline brought on selling orders with all classes of securities. Western Union, which held firm for awhile, began to break about 11 o'clock, and in a quarter of an hour had dropped eight per cent. The fall of the stock corresponded. The greatest excitement was the loan call, but the parties who have been prominent in loaning refused to loan any. Missouri Pacific was very prominent in the decline. It is said Gould has his Manhattan in loans, and is amply able to take care of it. Brokers say their is no reason for the raid. No failures are reported as yet.

THE PARIS ELOPEMENT.

The Lovers Experience a Hard Time in Getting Married.

LONDON, June 24.—The young Countess [illegible] are having a hard time to get [illegible]. Having placed themselves beyond the fear of police interference they had reason to believe that their application to the registrar at Dover for special license would be granted but to their dismay they were informed that fifteen days residence in England was necessary to entitle them to the document, and they are left a prey to the apprehension that in the interval complications may arise to separate them finally. It has been ascertained that Mielvaque, or Garboeuf, as he calls himself, whose employment as clerk in the French Chamber of Deputies carried with it the princely salary of $750 a year, left creditors in Paris whose aggregate claims amount to $10,000. Instead of being a scion of French nobility Mielvaque is the son of a bailiff in the department of Correge.

SPENCER ANSWERS LORNE.

The Canadian Tariff Discussed by the Late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

LONDON, June 24.—Earl Spencer published a reply to Lord Lorne's recent communication to the Times in reference to the Canadian tariff. He says he fully recognizes the perfect right of Canada to deal with her fiscal laws, though he had ventured to point out that the Government speeches might be interpreted as approving a policy which to him, as a free trader, seemed injurious to the interests of both Canada and England. With regard to Ireland the writer says: "The Marquis of Lorne appears to forget that Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill was not proposed to entrust the Dublin Parliament with the power of fixing the tariff."

DR. MCGLYNN'S CASE.

One Hundred Thousand Roman Catholics Protest Against His Excommunication.

NEW YORK June 24.—The following is a copy of the cablegram sent to Rome on Wednesday:

NEW YORK, June 22, 1887.

To Cardinal Simeoni, Prefect of the Propaganda, Rome.

One hundred thousand Catholics in mass meeting in this city, Saturday, June 18, have denounced the threatned excommunication of Dr. McGlynn, with whom they are prepared to stand, and protested against ecclesiastical interference with the political rights of American Citizens.

The Losses by Strikes.

CHICAGO, June 24.—At a meeting of the Bricklayers' Union, last night, a resolution was passed withdraing the demand for a Saturday pay day, and declaring the strike off. A careful estimate made of the loss in wages to striking and locked out employees in the vicinity of Chicago foots up nearly two and one-half million dollars.

A Wife Poisoner Lynched.

ABERDEEN, Miss., June 24.—At twelve o'clock yesterday morning forty masked men rode into Kusciusko, proceeded to the gaol, overpowered the gaol guard and took James M. Webb, a white man, to a convenient place and hanged him. On Sunday last Webb poisoned his wife.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

THE "TIMES" SUED.

LONDON, June 24.—Frank Hugh O'Donnell, foamerly member of Parliament for Dungarven and vice-president of the Home Rule confederation, has brought suit against the Times for libel. The suit is based upon an article commenting on a letter recently sent to the Times by O'Donnell to correct statements made by that paper regarding the alleged connection of Parnellism with Irish crimes. It is expected the "Parnellism and crime" issues will be raised in the trial.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

LONDON June 24.—The Cabinet has decided to prorogue Parliament about the middle of August. It is reported in Unionist quarters that if strong opposition be offered, the proposed supplementary crimes bill will be dropped.

MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL.

LONDON, June 24.—The House of Commons in committee has passed the preamble to the Manchester Ship Canal Bill. It requires that two pounds per share must be paid upon ordinary shares.

AN ABSENTEE.

CAIRO, June 24.—The French Consul at Cairo is the only foreign consul who has failed to offer congratulations to the British representative on the occasion of the jubilee.

AN INSANE KING.

LONDON, June 24.—A despatch from Berlin to the Standard says that an effort will probably be made at the next session of the Bavarian Parliament to dethrone King Otto, who is hopelessly insane. It is stated that the regent will accept the crown if offered by the people.

MAKING FRIENDS WITH SPAIN.

LONDON, June 24.—The French Ministry, which is seeking friendship with Spain, has ordered that no indulgence be shown, as hitherto, to conspirators against Spain, and M. Flourens has promised to espouse the Spanish claim to share in negotiations respecting the Suez canal.

A COLLAPSE.

LONDON, June 24.—Veresova, the anti-semetic leader, has been defeated at Czeigled by a large majority. He was the most powerful advocate in the party and the editor of the anti-semitic paper. His defeat heralds the collapse of the anti-semitic movement. The Government filled the town with troops to avoid a riot.

THE AFGHAN REBELLION.

SIMLA, June 24.—The Afghan situation has improved. The road between Cabul and Candahar has been re-opened. The rebels are dispirited and there is every prospect that the rebellion will soon collapse.

"PATRIOTS" SNUBBED.

PARIS, June 24.—It is stated that negotiations with the German Government had been begun by the French Government with reference to the trial at Leipsic of members of the French Patriot League, but were stopped as soon as the Patriotic League intervened.

GERMANY AND FRANCE.

BERLIN, June 24.—The official Alsace Gazette emphatically denies the report that Germany intends to expel the Frenchmen and to close French factories. A decree has been published forbidding volunteers to choose their own regiment, it having been found that all protestors joined the same regiment.

MISSION TO IRELAND.

Mgr. Persico and Mgr. Gualdi have left Rome for Ireland on the mission entrusted to them by the Pope. They are instructed to make a personal observation and prepare a report on the political and social condition of the Irish people.

HOME RULE.

The Marquis of Hartington's Speech—No Home Rule at Present For Ireland.

LONDON, June 24.—Tee Marquis of Hartington, in a speech at Manchester this evening, referred to Home Rule for Ireland as being for a time at least decided against. He protested against the minority in Parliament being allowed to further prevent legislation, especially denouncing that section of the minority directly associated with a foreign conspiracy aiming at the establishment of an Irish republic. Referring to Mr. Gladstone's offer for a conference, Lord Hartington said that the time had not arrived for a re-union of the Liberal party. He demanded a general basis of agreement before undertaking negotiations. Any agreement, he added, must be open to the full knowledge of the Conservatives, who had been loyal to the Unionists and deserved their confidence in return.

THE PACIFIC ROUTE

Favoured by British Statesmen and Commercial Bodies.

LONDON, June 24.—The debate on the Indian and China contract has been adjourned till Thursday, and the contract was not adopted, as I cabled; but it is certain to be approved of. The feeling in the lobby is that the Government must enter into negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway in addition to the proposed mail route. Both political parties strongly support the Canadian route and object to the India and China contract being made for ten years. Fear is expressed that the Canadian route may fall into the hands of some foreign power, and the commercial bodies of England, recognizing this possibility, are urging the members of Parliament to obtain a concession from the Government in favor of the Canadian route. Mr. Shaw-Lefvre, the late Postmaster-General, favors a reconsideration of the question, and Admiral Commerell from practical experience recognizes the great benefits in the event of a war, of the Canadian Pacific route. The St. James' Gazette, the Government organ, advocates the new line of communication with the East, which would enable England to get in the thin end of the wedge of competition.—Mail.

Tobacco Under the Ban.

CHICAGO, June 24.—After a spirited discussion the Augustana synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, adopted a resolution that no student in the synod educational institution at Rock Island be allowed to use tobacco.

The Daily Review

SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1887.

FREETRADERS AGAIN.

DEPRIVED of their leader and reduced to a mere mob with no settled policy, the Opposition at the very end of the session of the House of Commons again resorted to their old abuse of the National Policy. One after another, from Sir R. Cartwright down, they renewed their old denunciations of protection of our home industries, and of the people of Canada for being so foolish as to protect them.

It is sad that the Opposition, whether from the natural tendency of their minds or from party exigencies, should be so inimical to Canadian industries, to Canadian manufacturers and Canadian mechanics. But something is gained by their ceasing their hypocritical pretences of the election campaign and speaking out their minds; open enemies are less dangerous than treacherous, pretended friends. Those who do not wish to see our factories closed, while we help to maintain those of other countries, have had another warning not to trust to the sham conversion of these freetraders, when they are seeking the votes of the workingmen. Some of them even rebuked Sir Charles Tupper because he took it for granted that Mr. Blake was sincere in his professed new friendship for Canadian industries, which they repudiated for their late leader.

The fact is the Opposition are free traders so long as they cannot hope to gain power by turning their coats. They were ready to accept the National Policy last winter if they could thereby secure the votes of those working in our factories. And now these free traders are allying themselves with Wiman, Butterworth and Co. to annex the Dominion commercially to the United States with a far higher protective tariff. If they are not allowed to rule Canada as free traders, they are ready to abandon free trade and make our Dominion the vassal of Washington.

"CERTAIN busy bodies in the Senate tried to have Senator Trudel, one of the very few remaining Liberals in that body, turned out on the ground that he had parted with [illegible] will probably astonish Senator Trudel to learn that he is a Liberal. The Senator is so intensely Conservative that he cannot agree with Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues, because he considers them too Liberal. A man, however, who is too Conservative to co-operate with Liberal-Conservatives, is welcomed by these so-called Liberals. They do not appear to care what a man's political views are. If he is only opposed to the Government their arms are open to receive him.

We are informed by the Globe that:—"The Australian Governments now owe 150 million pounds to British capitalists, India owes 150 millions and the Canadian Dominion 35 million pounds."

Yet at other times the Globe vociferates and deludes careless readers into believing that our Dominion has a public debt larger than that of any other people. The truth is that few civilized communities are less indebted or more lightly taxed. The Australians for instance with a smaller population have more than four times our debt.

The New York Tribune refers as follows to the freetraders in the United States who are "dissembling their love":—

"There is no reason for trusting men who declare that protection "is robbery," but who say that, for political expediency's sake, this is not a good time to stop the robbery."

Could the portrait be more lifelike if the Tribune were depicting our Canadian freetraders when cringing for the votes of the "robbers."

IT is to be hoped that Mr. Mills' hurt vanity will be cured by the salve of his having succeeded in fining Mr. Pope $350 for not gazetting so important a man early enough, his end being obtained by the threat to fine the people of Canada the expense of two or three days' session of Parliament if he was balked in his vengeance. It was a small business, even for a deputy assistant leader of a minority.

OMEMEE.

12TH OF JULY.—The Orangemen of the district of Emily will celebrate the anniversary of the Boyne with the brethren in Peterborough.

UNION CELEBRATION.—The Methodist and the Presbyterian congregations held a united Jubilee service in the Methodist church on Tuesday at 2.30 p.m. The firemen, in uniform, headed by the band, marched from the village hall and took the places reserved for them in the front part of the church. In the absence of the Reeve, Mr. Gabriel Balfour was called to the chair and ably filled the position. The service consisted of music and addresses by the Rev. Mr. Watch and the chairman. The singing by the choir, of music suitable to the day, was well received and showed thorough preparation. The church was beautifully and artistically decorated with flowers, mottoes and flags, the flowers being massed behind the communion rail. Owing to the rain the church was not as well filled as the service deserved, and many, no doubt, were greatly disappointed at not being able to attend; those who did attend were well repaid for their trouble. The service closed with "God Save the Queen."—Herald.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT

FIRST SESSION OF THE SIXTH CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

Railway Subsidies—Justice to Ontario—Mr. Mills' Hurt Vanity—Labour Commission — Speech From the Throne.

THURSDAY, June 23.—The Speaker took the chair at 10.30.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. POPE moved the House into Committee on the railway subsidies.

Mr. MCMULLEN at great length attacked the railway subsidies and the Government.

Sir C. TUPPER said it was a wise policy which they had adopted from the Mackenzie Administration.

Sir R. CARTWRIGHT said there was the difference that they had given rails not money.

Mr. CHARLTON complained that the people were corrupt to sell their votes for these bribes, and also that Ontario had not got her fair share.

Sir C. TUPPER replied that not including the present resolutions, there had been subsidized by the Dominion Government 894 miles of railway in Ontario, 910 in Quebec, 350 in New Brunswick and 118 in Nova Scotia. Of this mileage there was in operation in Ontario 650 miles and 297 in Quebec.

After some further discussion the resolutions were adopted and a bill was passed through all its stages.

CONCURRENCE.

Mr. MILLS renewed his attacks upon Mr. Pope for not gazetting him soon enough.

Sir C. TUPPER said he would withdraw the increase to Mr. Pope's salary, because of the Opposition threats that otherwise they would delay prorogation for two or three days.

Concurrence was voted in the other resolutions, and the Supply Bill was passed.

LABOUR COMMISSION.

Sir J. MACDONALD in reply to Mr. Casey said that the Labour Commission had not yet begun operations. Two or three more appointments would be made and representation on the Board would be given to the working classes.

COMPLIMENTARY.

Mr. TROW, the opposition whip, complimented the Speaker, expressed regret at the retirement of Mr. Blake and the cause, and reviewed the Session.

Mr. WRIGHT also complimented the Speaker and congratulated the Premier on his continued vigor of mind and body.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL at 4 o'clock prorogued Parliament with the following address from the throne:—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from further attendance in Parliament, I desire to convey to you my appreciation of the diligence and earnestness which you have shown in the performance of your important duties.

I thank you in the Queen's name for the cordial and affectionate congratulations you have offered to Her Majesty on the completion of the fiftieth anniversary of her happy reign. I have taken care to transmit your loyal address to be laid at the foot of the throne.

The readjustment of the tariff for the purpose of further developing our home industries upon principles which have been received with such marked acceptance by the people of Canada, will, it is confidently expected, in an especial manner encourage the working of our vast mines of iron and coal, and promote the production within our own country of all the more important iron manufactures.

The establishment of a Department of Trade and Commerce under the supervision of a responsible Minister, and the measures you have passed for the better organization of other departments of Government, will, I trust, tend to aid in the extension of our home and foreign trade, as well as to improve the efficiency of the public service.

The numerous Acts relating to railway and other industrial enterprises to which I have given her Majesty's assent, indicate a steady growth in the national progress of the Dominion, and your liberal appropriation for the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie canal ensures the completion of our great system of inland navigation at an early period.

Our agricultural population will, I am sure, learn with much pleasure of the provision you have made for the maintenance of the experimental farm in the vicinity and the establishment of auxiliary stations in the several provinces.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In Her Majesty's name I thank you for the provision you have made for the requirements of the public service. I shall see that it is applied with all due regard to economy.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I trust that under the blessings of Almighty God the present promise of an abundant harvest may be fully realized, and that when we meet again I shall be able to congratulate you on a still further increase in the general prosperity of the country. Meanwhile I bid you farewell.

East Algoma Nominations.

SAULT STE. MARIE, June 23.—R. A. Lyon and George Rankin, of Windsor, were nominated here to day, the former by the Liberals and the latter by the Conservatives, for the representation of East Algoma in the Ontario Legislature. Mr. Rankin says he will go to the polls.

GENERAL.

Rumours are current that King Milan of Servia is about to abdicate.

A congratulatory address from the Anglican Synod of Montreal was cabled to the Queen on Thursday.

The divorce bill affording relief to Susan Ash, was passed by the Senate on Thursday as amended by the Commons.

The Wimbledon team left Quebec on Thursday for Liverpool on the Parisian. Lieut.-Colonel Ouimet will leave next Thursday to assume command of the team.

It is stated that the Manitoba Provincial railway to the boundary can be graded in six or seven weeks, and that the extension of the Northern Pacific to connect with it will be completed about the same time.

The Canadian Pacific railway has decided to institute a service to summer resorts on Lake St. Louis, and lively competition is expected with the Grand Trunk, who intend extending the Lachine branch with the same object.

Extradition proceedings against James A. L. Wilson, the defaulting treasurer of the Chesapeake and Deleware Canal Company, of Philadelphia, were commenced before Judge McDougall at Toronto on Thursday. A remand was granted for eight days.

Mr. James Conmee was elected member of the Provincial Legislature by acclamation in West Algoma on Thursday.

LINDSAY.

HORSE KILLED.—James Robinson, who delivers the goods for Hurley & Brady, had his horse killed on Saturday night. He was returning from the East Ward and while approaching the Lindsay street bridge was run into by a horse and buggy coming off the bridge. The shaft of the buggy struck Robinson's horse on the breast and penetrated nearly a foot into the animal's body. Before Robinson could do anything the parties in the buggy drove off rapidly without offering assistance or expressing regret at the accident. The wounded horse staggered a few steps, fell and bled to death in about twenty minutes.—Post.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

"Frank! Frank! Frank!" wailed and howled the voice, now overhead, now on this side, now on that, till at last Muller, thoroughly mystified, and feeling his superstitious fears rising apace as the moaning sound flitted about beneath the dark arch of the gum trees, made a rush for his horse, which was standing snorting and trembling in every limb. It is almost as easy to work upon the superstitious fears of a dog or a horse as upon those of a man, but Muller, not being aware of this, took the animal's alarm as a clear indication of the unCanny nature of the voice. With a single bound he sprang [illegible] and as he did so the stranger [illegible] a mocking laugh.

"Frank, thou shalt die in blood as I did, Frank!"

Muller turned livid with fear, and the cold perspiration streamed from his face. He was a bold man enough in a general way but this was too much for his nerves.

"It is my mother's voice, it is her very words!" he called out aloud, and then, dashing his spurs into his horse's flanks, he went like a flash away from the accursed spot; nor did he draw rein till he came to his own place, ten miles away. Twice the horse fell in the darkness, for there was no moon, the second time throwing him heavily, but he only dragged it up with a curse, and, springing into the saddle again, fled on as before.

Thus did the man who did not hesitate to plot and to execute the cruel slaughter of unoffending men cower beneath the fancied echo of a dead woman's voice! Truly human nature is full of contradictions.

When the thunder of the horse's hoofs grew faint Jantje emerged from one of his hiding places, and, throwing himself down in the center of the dusty road, kicked and rolled with delight, shaking all the while with an inward joy that his habits of caution would not permit him to give audible vent to. "His mother's voice, his mother's words," he quoted to himself. "How should he know that Jantje remembers the old woman's voice—ay, and the words that the devil in her spoke too! Hee! Hee! Hee!"

Bessie fled without stopping till she reached the orange trees in front of the veranda, where, reassured by the lights from the windows, she paused to consider. Not that she was troubled by Jantje's mysterious howling: indeed, she was too preoccupied to give it a second thought. What she was debating was whether she should say anything about her encounter with Frank Muller. After pausing for a few seconds to pick a branch of orange blossom and to decorate herself generally, which, not being hysterically inclined, she very soon did, she quietly entered the house as though nothing had happened. The very first person she met was John himself, who had come in by the back way. He laughed at her orange blossom bouquet, and said that it was most appropriate, and then proceeded to embrace her tenderly in the passage; and indeed he would have been a poor sort of lover if he had not. It was exactly at this juncture that old Silas Croft happened to open the sitting room door and come full upon this tender and attractive tableau.

"Well, I never!" said the old gentleman. "What is the meaning of all this, Bessie?"

Of course there was nothing for it but to come in and explain the facts of the case, which John did with much humming and hawing and a general awkwardness of manner that baffles description, while Bessie stood by, her hand upon her lover's shoulder, blushing as red as any rose.

The old man listened in silence till John had finished—a smile upon his face and a kindly twinkle in his keen eyes.

"So," he said, "that is what you young people have been after, is it? I suppose that you want to enlarge your interests in the farm, eh, John? Well, upon my word, I don't blame you; you might have gone farther and fared worse. These sort of things never come singly, it seems. I had another request for your hand, my dear, only this afternoon from that scoundrel Frank Muller, of all men in the world," and his face darkened as he said the name. "I sent him off with a flea in his ear, I can tell you. Had I known then what I know now I should have referred him to John. There, there! He is a bad man and a dangerous man, but let him be. He is taking plenty of rope and he will hang himself one of these days. Well, my dears, this is the best bit of news that I have heard for many a long day. It is time you got married, both of you, for it is not right for man to live alone, or woman either. I have done it all my life, and that is the conclusion I have come to after thinking the matter over somewhere about fifty years. Yes, you have my consent and my blessing, too; and you will have something more one day before so very long. Take her, John, take her. I have had a rough life, but I have seen something of women for all of that, and I tell you that there is not a sweeter or a better or a prettier woman in south Africa than Bessie Croft, and in wanting to marry her you have shown your sense. God bless you both, my dears. And now, Bessie, come and give your old uncle a kiss. I hope that you won't let John quite drive me out of your head; that's all. For you see, my dear, having no children of my own, I have managed to get very fond of you in the last twelve years or so."

Bessie came and kissed the old man tenderly.

"No, uncle," she said, "neither John nor anybody nor anything in the world can do that," and it was evident from her manner that she meant what she said. Bessie had a large heart, and was not at all the person to let her lover drive her uncle and benefactor out of his share of it.

CHAPTER XIV.

JOHN TO THE RESCUE.

The important domestic events described in the last chapter took place on Dec. 7, 1880, and for the next twelve days or so everything went as happily at Mooifontein as things should go under the circumstances. Every day Silas Croft beamed with a more enlarged geniality in his satisfaction at the turn things had taken, and every day John found cause to congratulate himself more and more on the issue of his bold venture toward matrimony. Now that he came to be on such intimate terms with his betrothed, he perceived a hundred charms and graces in her character which he had never suspected before. Bessie was like a flower: the more she basked in the light and warmth of her love the more her character opened and unfolded, shedding perfumed sweetness round her and revealing unguessed charms. It is so with all women, and more especially with a woman of her stamp, whom nature has made to love and be loved as maid and wife and mother. Her undoubted personal beauty also shared in this development, her fair face taking a richer hue and her eyes an added depth and meaning. She was in every respect, save one, all that a man could desire in his wife, and even the exception was one that would have stood to her credit with most men. It was this: she was not an intellectual woman, although she certainly possessed more than the ordinary share of intelligence and work a day common sense. Now John was a decidedly intellectual man, and, what is more, he highly appreciated that rare quality in the other sex. But, after all, when one is just engaged to a sweet and lovely woman, one does not think much about her intellect. Those sort of reflections come afterward.

And so they sauntered hand in hand through the sunny days and were happy. Least of all did they allow the rumors which occasionally reached them from the great Boer gathering at Paarde Kraal to disturb their serenity. There had been so many of these rumors of rebellion that folk were getting to regard them as a chronic state of affairs.

"Oh, the Boers!" said Bessie, with a pretty toss of her golden head, as they were sitting one morning on the veranda. "I'm sick to death of hearing about the Boers and all their got up talk. I know what it is; it is just an excuse for them to go away from their farms and wives and children and idle about at these great meetings, and drink square face with their mouths full of big words. You see what Jess says in her last letter. People in Pretoria believe that it is all nonsense from beginning to end, and I think they are perfectly right."

"By the way, Bessie," asked John, "have you written to Jess telling her of our engagement?"

"Oh, yes; I wrote some days ago, but the letter only went yesterday. She will be pleased to hear about it. Dear old Jess, I wonder when she means to come and see us again. She has been away long enough."

John made no answer, but went on smoking his pipe in silence, wondering if she would be pleased. He did not understand her yet. She had gone away just as he was beginning to understand her.

Presently he observed Jantje sneaking about between the orange trees as though he wished to call attention to himself. Had he not wanted to do so he would have moved from one to the other in such a way that nobody could have seen him. His partial and desultory appearances indicated that he was on view.

"Come out of those trees, you little rascal, and stop slipping about like a snake in a stone wall!" shouted John. "what is it you want—wages?"

Thus adjured, Jantje advanced and sat down on the path as usual, in the full glare of the sun.

"No, baas," he said," it is not wages. They are not due yet."

"What is it then?"

"No, baas, it is this. The Boers have declared war on the English government, and they have eaten up the rooibaatjes at Bronker's Spruit, near Middelburg. Joubert shot them all there the day before yesterday."

"What!" shouted John, letting his pipe fall in his astonishment. "Stop, though, that must be a lie. You say near Middelburg, the day before yesterday; that would be Dec. 20. When did you hear this?"

"At daybreak, baas. A Basutu told me."

"Then there is an end of it. The news could not have got here in thirty-eight hours. What do you mean by coming to me with such a tale?"

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the bowels gently, cleansing all the secretions and cool. Sold by all druggists.

Under the Gaslight

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Thanks.

At a meeting of Lansdowne Lodge, S. O. E. on Friday evening a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. T. Butcher, of Smith, for gratuitously supplying evergreens for trimming the S. O. E. arch.

Journalistic.

The Omemee Herald celebrated the commencement of the tenth year of its existance by donning a new dress. The Herald is a newsy and sensible paper and it is pleasing to notice this evidence of its prosperity.

The Golden Year.

The Newmarket Era celebrated the Jubilee by not only publishing a picture of the Queen and several other good pictures, but also by printing the title of the paper in gold. It was a unique and appropriate way of signalizing the "golden year."

The Young Men.

Mr. C. B. Francesco, a native of "Sunny Italy," and Mr. Jno. S. Hall, formerly of Peterborough, will speak at the meeting in the Y. M. C. A. Rooms to-night at 8 o'clock All men are invited. The meetings on Sunday at 4 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. will be held as usual.

To be Removed.

On account of the annual excursion, which takes place on Dominion Day, the Sons of England cannot take part in the programme laid down by the Jubilee Committee. They will therefore remove their arch the beginning of next week, unless disposed of in the meantime.

To Pay Half.

A deputation representing the Horticultural Society waited on the Finance Committee of the County Council and requested the payment of half of the amount required to put up the Jubilee electric light tower in the Horticultural Gardens. The request was complied with and the amount, $32, was recommended to be paid. The Society will call on the Town Council for the other half.

Visitors Expected.

Some prominent visitors from other places have been invited and are expected to be present on Decoration Day, and take part with the Peterborough Oddfellows, in the ceremonies on Tuesday the 28th inst. The merchants of the town can do a great deal to help this event to pass off with success, by allowing their employees two or three hours on the afternoon of Tuesday, to join with their respective lodges. 1d147

A Beautiful Park.

The Kingston Whig under the above heading says:—"Ald. McKay has returned from Peterborough, where, he says, there is a park worthy of the name and the prettiest he ever saw. The flowers in it are profuse and magnificent, and in one large bed are formed with pansies the words "Victoria's jubilee year." There is also a fountain with gold fish swimming in the basin. He told Ald. Redden, chairman of parks, about what he saw this morning, and asked him to take a leaf out of Peterborough's book."

Further Particulars.

The Oddfellows received per express today, from the Grand Secretary, a new and complete set of the beautiful decoration ceremony, for their Decoration Day on Tuesday next, the 28th June, and the new odes are being printed at this office. The splendid band of the Fire Brigade, under the able leadership of Mr. F. Miller, will lead in the ceremonies at the graves. Let the general public do their share (and they have never yet been behind hand when aroused to the occasion), and this approaching Decoration Day at Little Lake Cemetery will long be remembered.

Floral Donations.

The firemen wish to return their sincere thanks to the ladies who so kindly sent flowers to the Fire Hall on Jubilee day. The following are the names of those who sent in flowers and the kind of the donation:—Mrs. (Rev.) Clementi, basket of flowers; Mrs. B. Cooney, twenty-four button hole bouquets and six handsome bunches of flowers; Mrs. Mowry, large hand bouquet; Miss Dunlop, hand bouquet; Mrs. Wm. Hamilton, Reid street, three hand bouquets; Mrs. Sherwood, one hand bouquet; Mrs. P. Hamilton, three hand bouquets; Mrs. A. Comstock, two hand bouquets; Mrs. Gilmour, six handsome wreaths; Mrs. Lech, one handsome wreath, one hand bouquet and one table bouquet; Mrs. Nicholls, one handsome hand bouquet; Mrs. Manson, one handsome hand bouquet; Mrs. Jas. Stevenson, one handsome hand bouquet; Mrs. Geo. Stethem, one basket of flowers; Mrs. Best, hand bouquet and five button hole bouquets; Miss Davidson, one hand bouquet; Mrs. Kingan, two hand bouquets.

Flowers for the Dead.

The people of Peterborough are justly proud of their beautiful cemetery, and one of the attractive features every year of late has been the commendable custom inaugurated by the Oddfellows of decorating the graves of their deceased brethren, which is now largely followed by the general public, thus making a day for decoration, which has become a recognized custom among us, and one that should never be allowed to fall away. Those who have friends or relatives buried in that beautiful spot, as a rule, make an extra effort on Decoration Day to add to their collection of flowers already placed by loving hands, and by so doing the beauty and appearance of that sacred resting place is doubly enhanced in attractiveness to those who "linger there."

Winding up Daylight.

At the gaol on Thursday one of the lunatics incarcerated there was engaged turning his arm as if turning a crank. He assured the gaoler in the most solemn manner that he was winding up daylight and that if he should stop the world would be at once wrapped in darkness.

A select stock of Millinery, Mantles, Hoop-Skirts, Panniers, Bustles, &c., &c., at Turnbull's Ladies' Furnishing Store on Simcoe Street, Peterborough.

Save the Programmes.

The children who participated in the singing on Jubilee day are particularly requested to carefully preserve their flags and song programmes, as no more will be issued if avoidable. The programme will be repeated on July 1st. Those having programmes of the day are also requested to preserve them, as the sports will be exactly the same.

Bicycle.

The bicycle club met for a run on Friday evening. There was a good turnout of wheelers, and the parade up George street was quite inspiring. Strange as it may appear it is nevertheless true — Capt. Greatrix led the procession on the back of a kangaroo. In his hands it was quite docile and carried him in a graceful manner.

Cheese.

On Friday Mr. W. H. Wrighton shipped from Peterborough 97,500 pounds of cheese, which, at 8¾ cents per pound amounts to over $8,000. During the next few days he will ship from Lindsay, 3,300 pounds, and from Norwood, 4,000 pounds. The total value of his purchase at the last meeting of the cheese board is about $14,000.

A Garden Party.

Will be held at the Barnardo Home, on Monday evening, June 27th. Contributions of cake and fruit are solicited. Donations of flowers left at the Metropolitan Grocery, or the residence of Mrs. Geo. A. Cox, if possible before 2 o'clock on Monday, will be delivered.

A Good Portrait.

With the current number of Grip is presented an excellent portrait of Sir John Macdonald. Both as a work of art and a good likeness it deserves great commendation.

Coming.

Commissioner Coombs, head of the Salvation Army for Canada, will be in town to conduct a Council of war on July 12th. Adjutant Bolton will assist.

Entrance Examinations.

The extrance examinations will open in Peterborough, Lakefield and Norwood on July 4th, at 1.30 p.m.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

THE JUNE SESSION OF THE MUNICIPALITY REPRESENTATIVES.

The Conclusion of the Business—Reports from Committees Adopted—By-Laws Passed—No Grant to the Protestant Home.

THURSDAY.

The Council this day went to Burleigh to inspect bridges, Mr. Young taking the members up from Lakefield in his steamer Fairy.

FRIDAY.

On Friday Committees were in session all day, and the Councillors diligently inquired into particulars of business.

SATURDAY.

Warden Stewart took the chair at about ten o'clock. The minutes of the last day's session were approved.

A DUMMER ROAD.

Mr. KIDD moved, seconded by Mr. CROW, That a by-law of the Township of Dummer, establishing a road less than 66 feet wide be confirmed.—Carried.

EQUALIZATION.

Mr. BURNHAM read the report of the Committee on Equalization and Assessment as follows:—

The Committee on Equalization and Assessment beg to report as follows:—

1. Your Committee have examined the assessment rolls of the different municipalities, and find slight variations in the acreage of some of the municipalities, but not so perceptible as to lead us to vary the basis of last year. Your Committee would therefore recommend that the basis adopted by this Council last year be the basis of assessment for all county purposes for the year 1887, as shown by the schedule hereto annexed.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

JOHN BURNHAM, Chairman.

Peterborough, June 25, 1887.

The equalization schedule included the following statistics regarding the County:—

No. of Ratepayers	6,061
Population	22,756
Acres resident	497 478
Acres non-resident	99,620
Value of resident lands	$7,887,735
Value of non-resident lands	75,937
Value of real property	7,963,672
Value of personal property	717,450
Taxable income	14,290

The report was adopted, and a by-lay to confirm it was introduced and passed.

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

The following report was read by Mr. Moloney:—

The Committee of Roads and Bridges beg leave to report:

1. Your Committee are pleased to observe that the County of Hastings has granted the sum of $50 for the boundary line between the Township of Wallaston and Chandos, being a grant equal to that of this county for the same purpose.

2. Your committee recommend that hereafter when the County Engineer has notice that any County bridges are in an impassable state that he be hereby authorized and directed to take immediate action to repair the same as he sees fit.

3. Your committee recommend that the County Engineer be instructed to paint the Young's Point bridge and also to raise the guard pier above this bridge as high as he thinks advisable.

4. Your committee recommend that the planking on the Lakefield bridge be turned.

5. Your committee recommend that the Nassau bridge be repainted and that guards be placed at the approach to each end, and also that the County Engineer be instructed to call upon Mr. J. M. Irwin to strengthen the guard from the track to this bridge and to report to this Council at its next session.

6. Your Committee recommend that the guard pier above the Otonabee bridge be repaired by the County Engineer as he sees fit.

7. That the County Engineer be instructed to forthwith call together the joint committee of this Council and the Town of Peterborough appointed to confer upon the Locks bridge.

8. Your Committee recommend that the County assume the jurisdiction over all bridges lying within any township of this county over fifty feet in length, such length to be calculated from the natural bank of each stream under the ordinary flow of water, and to be finally determined as against all parties by the County Engineer, and that the County Clerk be instructed to prepare a by-law for such purpose.

9. Your Committee recommend that this county build a pier bridge over the Narrows between Harvey and Ennismore on a site and according to the plans to be settled by the County Engineer at a cost to this county of not more than $5,000.

10. Your Committee recommend that a grant of $250 payable to the Commissioner of Crown Lands, be given for expenditure on the south Buckhorn road, running from the 14th concession of the township of Smith to Buckhorn, on condition that the Ontario Government and the township of Smith grant a like amount for the same purpose.

11. Your Committee recommend that whereas a committee has heretofore been appointed to build and place a new bridge at the locks, jointly with the town of Peterborough, the powers of such committee be extended so as to alter and change the site of such bridge to such place as the committee deem most fit.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

JOHN MOLONEY, Chairma

County Council Chamber, Peterborough, June 25, 1887.

Mr. BURNHAM moved, seconded by Mr STRICKLAND,—That the report be referred back to make the length of bridges assumed by the County 100 feet and over.

Mr. KIDD moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. FINDAY,—That the report be referred back with instructions to make the County responsible for only half the cost when the bridges do not exceed 100 feet and are over 50, and in any event not till the County Engineer has become satisfied of the necessity of such construction and repairs, and that the Treasurer only pay on certificates of the engineer.

Mr. KIDD's amendment was lost on the following division:

YEAS—Messrs. Kidd, Finlay, Elmhirst, Wild, Brown, Crow and Mansfield—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Moloney, Garbutt, Burnham, Strickland, Hicks, Crough, Forster, Lang, Sanderson and Fitzgerald—10.

Mr. Burnham's motion was put and carried.

Mr. STRICKLAND moved, seconded by Mr. BURNHAM,—That the following be added to the 10th clause:—"Provided the Reeve of Smith be appointed commissioner to expend the money."—Carried.

Mr. WALSH moved, seconded by Mr. WALSH,—That the report be amended to state that any cost of the Harvey bridge over $5,000 be provided for or guaranteed by the Township of Harvey before the contract be let.—Carried.

The report was adopted as amended.

Mr. ELMHIRST moved, seconded by Mr. FINLAY,—That a special grant of $50 be given to repair the Deer river bridges, provided the County of Hastings give a like sum.—Carried.

THANKS TENDERED,

On motion it was resolved that thanks of this Council be tendered to Mr. C. Young for placing his steamer at the disposal of the Council on Thursday—Carried.

COUNTY PROPERTY.

Mr. SANDERSON read the following report of the Property Committee:—

The Committee on County Property beg leave to report:—

1. That the County Secretary be instructed to furnish the Registry office with a suitable clock.

2. That the gaoler be authorized to remove the fence in front of the gaol and place the same on the south and east sides of the Court House property.

3. That the Warden and Treasurer be authorized to sell to Mr. James Naylor the interest of this County in lot No. 4 in the 5th con. of Fenelon, in the County of Victoria, at the best price they can get, and to execute all proper conveyances.

4. That no action be taken with reference to the communication of the Clerk of the Town of Peterborough, asking this Council to bear one-half the cost of proposed hydrants on the corner of Murray and College streets, in the Town of Peterborough.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

MICHAEL SANDERSON, Chairman.

County Council Chamber, Peterborough, June 25, 1887.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. FORSTER read the report of the Committee on Appointments as follows:—

The Committee on Appointments beg leave to report:—

1. Your Committee recommend that the County Secretary be instructed to notify the Clerk of the Town of Peterborough that this Council objects to the appointment of Thomas Cahill, one of the Municipal Councillors, as arbitrator in behalf of the Town of Peterborough re the Administration of Justice, etc., as the said appointment is illegal.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

JOS. FORSTER, Chairman.

THE CROWN PRINCE.

His Condition Worse—Suffering From Jubilee Exertions.

LONDON, June 26.—The Crown Prince of Germany has paid a severe penalty for his participation in the royal procession to Westminster Abbey on Tuesday last. The dust, fatigue and excitement of the day were too much for him and when he reached home at night he was so ill that his medical attendants and Dr. Morell Mackenzie had to be summoned in all haste. His throat was found to be greatly inflamed and his condition worse than at any time since a month before his first operation. The swelling is so strong that Dr. Mackenzie has not even been able to proceed with a further operation as had been agreed. The news concerning his health has been kept from the public as much as possible, but his immediate entourage seem in very low spirits about his condition.

THE EASTERN PROBLEM.

King Milan's Unpleasant Trip To Vienna—France-Russian Intrigue.

LONDON, June 25.—The visit of King Milan of Servia to Vienna is for many reasons personally distasteful to him, but none the less necessary. The unsatisfactory condition of Servian affairs to Austria, the predominance of Russian influence in the Councils of the Servian Government, and the waning power of King Milan have combined to render it not only desirable, but imperative both to the Austrian Government and the Servian monarch that the latter should make an effort to purge his Court of Muscovite intrigue and regain his lost authority. The virtual alliance between Russia and France, entered into with the object of oppssing the Anglo-Turkish treaty, but certain to ripen into a league against Austria in the Balkans, demands immediate measures on the part of Austria to offset it. With Russia alone to contend against Servia was not necessary to Austria; but Russia allied with France and Austria as the common object of attack or coercion, presents a situation that must be promptly and effectively met. From the Czech portion of the Austrian Empire, Francis Joseph can count upon enthusiastic support against Russia, but his Servian neighbor can be of little service to him while carrying the weight of the Czar's yoke. It is then for the purpose of devising some means of throwing off that yoke, or, more properly, of substituting for it the Austrian collar, that King Milan has been informed that his presence in Vienna would be welcome.

BIG BLAZE IN CHICAGO.

Destructive Fire at the Stock Yards—The Killed and Injured.

CHICAGO, June 26.—A million and a quarter dollars went up in smoke at the Union stock yards yesterday. Early this morning one of the employes of the Chicago Packing and Provision Company discovered a fire in the tankroom. In a few moments one of the tanks exploded, scattering burning lard over the adjacent buildings, and a dozen separate fires were soon competing with each other in the destruction of the immense establishment. The fire burned fiercely for fourteen hours, but is now extinguished. The Chicago Pork Packing and Provision Company's Works occupy about six acres of ground, but the fire was kept within the district bounded by Fortieth street, Centre avenue, Forty-Second street and the railroad tracks, a block west of Centre avenue Twenty engines and every reservoir in the yards were soon brought into play, and all the efforts of the firemen and hundreds of stockyard employees were bent towards keeping the conflagration confined to the works of the Chicago Company. While a number of the men were under the main building one of the division walls fell, seriously injuring five men, one of whom, Thomas Murphy, died to-night. Eleven thousand barrels of pork, valued at $300,000, belonging to P. D. Armour were in the burned building. The plant was valued at $300,000 and the stock at $100,00. About one-half of the company's 2.000 employes will be thrown out of work.

Passing Counterfeit Bills.

ST. HYACINTHE, June 25.—One Arthur Runnells, aged about 30 years, belonging to an old and respectable family of Milton, Que., was arrested here on Saturday last for passing counterfeit bills. "being one dollar greenbacks raised to fives." His first attempt apparently was made on a baker by offering one of his bills for a loaf of bread, but the clerk in charge, suspecting that it was not genuine, refused to change it. He then proceeded to Mr. Carpentier's confectionery shop, and purchasing a half pound of candy, handed the clerk, a young lady, a five, for which she gave him the requisite change. Mr. Carpentier coming in detected the counterfeit, and immediately went to Chief of Police Paget, who effected his arrest in a short time, and lodged him in the cells. He was brought up yesterday before Judge Sicotte and bound over to appear at the first term of the Criminal Court, bail being accepted.

Masonic Convention.

CHICAGO, June 25.—The convention of present and past Grand Master Masons of the Unsted States and Canada was concluded yesterday. A resolution affirming the supremacy of Grand Lodges in their respective territories was carried. This was the principal subject before the convention. Grand Master Darragh said the object of the convention had been misconstrued. There was no intention to form a Supreme Grand Lodge or to interfere with the jurisdictions of state Grand Lodges in matters of a judicial or executive nature. This was the first convention of the kind ever held. Others will now follow.

Chief Justice Cameron Dead.

LATEST CABLE NEWS!

NEW IRON DUTIES.

LONDON, June 25.—Mr. Carnegie, in an interview at Wolverhampton yesterday, said that the Canadian Government's statement that the heavy duties on metal would increase British and decrease American trade was merely to gull the British ironmasters. The proposed reductions announced from Ottawa had the same object. Canada, he said, fully intended to have her own iron and steel manufactures, and nothing would stop her, and she would rather have them established by English than American capital.

RECONCILIATION IMPOSSIBLE.

LONDON, June 25.—Lord Hartington, in his speech last night said: "The Unionists cannot consider the treatment of Ulster and the question of Irish representation in the Imperial Parliament as matters of detail, as Mr. Gladstone appears to do. Until we know where we stand on this question, further negotiations will be futile."

MR. PARNELL.

LONDON, June 25.—Mr. Parnell's friends are very anxious indeed that he should go abroad for the rest of the session, leaving the management of the Parliamentary Party to be directed by a committee, which he would nominate. There is no possibility of any successor being nominated by Mr. Parnell. The committee, if such a body comes into existence, will probably consist of the following members: Messrs. John Dillon, Wm. O'Brien Healy, Sexton, T. P. O'Connor, Arthur O'Connor, Timothy Harrington. Justin McCarthy would be chairman of the parliamentary committee, and would probably be the controlling spirit. Mr. Dillon and Mr. Healy would probably control matters in the House, while Messrs. Dillon, O'Brien and Timothy Harrington would do so in Ireland, but at present nothing is decided. It is difficult to say whether Mr. Parnell will or will not depart for summer climes.

AN AMERICAN'S VIEWS.

LONDON, June 25.—Mr. Andrew Carnegie has made several speeches recently, which have attracted national attention and won for him the reputation of having grasped, in a masterly way, the political questions of the hour. In an address at Glasgow he ardently expressed the Liberal cause and expressed his belief that the Liberals have greater reason to hope for ultimate success [illegible] the Liberal Unionists in vigorous rhetoric, and among the numerous similes with which his remarks abounded was one likening the Marquis of Hartington to a mule whose progress was always compulsory and dependent upon the application of the whip.

THE PATRIOTIC LEAGUE.

PARIS, June 25.—At a meeting of the Patriotic League last night, Mr. Paul de Rouiede and Mr. Sannboeuf, respectively honorary president and active-president of the league, made speeches denouncing the German High Courts at Leipsic, for the severity of the sentences pronounced against the Alsace conspirators. An immense crowd was assembled outside the building, shouting for Boulanger, and declaring that if he were in the war office, there would be no trouble in securing a mitigation of the sentences and the prevention of future condemnations of similar harshness in the German Courts.

CELEBRATION AT PARIS.

PARIS, June 25.—The American colony in Paris will celebrate the Jubilee of Queen Victoria. in the American church, on the Avenue Alma, on the anniversary of her coronation, Tuesday, June 28.

GREAT RAILWAY PROJECT.

LONDON, June 25.—A despatch from St. Petersburg says: The Czar has approved the decision of the State Council to construct a railway from Tomsk to Irkutsk and Stretdusk, and from Lake Kiaranka to Vladisostock. The work will be begun, if possible, next spring, and completed in five years. A direct alternate railway and water transportation line will thus be established between St. Petersburg and the Pacific, the journey occupying about fifteen days.

JUBILEE ECHOES.

LONDON, June 25.—Jubilee demonstrations of one kind or another will go on for the next three weeks. The Queen is said to be entertaining all her guests at Windsor Castle at her own expense, providing, among other things, free passes to the theatres and opera houses, which her distinguished guests prefer to patronise.

THE TRANS-CANADIAN ROUTE.

LONDON, June 25.—The Government is considering an offer by which, upon the payment of a subsidy of £50,000 a year England will secure their line of steamships by the trans-Canadiar route to the East Indies, Australia, and other British colonies.

FRENCH-CANADIANS IN PARIS.

PARIS, June 25.—A banquet was given here last night on the occasion of the formation of a national French Canadian society of St. Jean Baptiste. Sixty guests were present. Hon. M. Fabre, the French Commissioner for Canada, presided. M. Lefaivre, the French Consul, at New York, was present. M. Delporte made an elogent speech in reply to M. Fabre's toasts to Queen Victoria and President Grevy.

THE MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL.

LONDON, June 25.—Mr. Walker has contracted to complete the Manchester Ship Canal for £561,000, less than the Parliamentary estimates. He is willing to accept £500,000 in ordinary shares as part payment.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

LONDON, June 25.—The enormous degree of popularity won by the Crown Prince Frederick William during the Jubilee festivities has been wonderfully enhanced by the relation of an incident of the state procession to Westminster Abbey, showing his democratic tendencies. Arriving at the Abbey as one of the personal attendants of the Queen, and next to Her Majesty the chief attraction of the show, the Prince, as he was ascending the steps, chanced to see in the crowd an old friend whom he had not met for eight years. He stopped, turned back, and, with great difficulty making his way through the crowd, shook hands with the gentleman, returning to and entering the Abbey amid the cheers of those who witnessed the scene.

A WATERSPOUT.

PARIS, June 26.—A waterspout burst yesterday near the quays at Toulouse, submerging a wash house in which were eight persons, all of whom were drowned. Since then the bodies of nine more persons have been recovered.

The Daily Review

MONDAY, JUNE 27, 1887.

APPRECIATED ABROAD.

The Milwaukee Miner and Manufacturer speaks as follows:—

"It begins to look as though Canadian iron properties are to receive a benefit from the boom which is now raging in the iron regions of this country. A syndicate composed of Milwaukee and Chicago capitalists, of whom Hustis, Coughlin and Ray are the representatives, recently purchased a tract of 200 acres of mineral land in the township of South Crosby, Leeds county, Ontario. They have been doing some prospecting and some samples of ore were received in Chicago this week, and the company at once received an order for 1,000 tons at $6 per ton from a Chicago steel Company."

It may be that Canadian iron properties are to receive a benefit, but it is by no means so clear where the benefit to Canadians is to come in. From all quarters there reach us reports that capitalists from the United States are thus monopolizing our richest iron mines in order to export the cheaply acquired ore and give to foreigners the profit of manufacturing a valuable raw material that we are neglecting. Then we re-import the manufactured article and pay them for thus utilizing our national wealth. The benefit to the United States capitalist and workingman in this transaction is easy to see, but any benefit in it for Canadians is imperceptible.

We are told by Canadian free traders that we cannot make iron in Ontario because we have not the coal? And pray why not? Our Milwaukee contemporary tells us that this excellent Canadian ore is to be taken abroad to the coal, and we suppose we may safely assume that there will be some profit in this and similar operations. Why should not the same profit result from bringing the coal to the iron?

The Cleveland Iron Trade Review tells us:

"The annual Canadian consumption of pig iron in 250,000, not inclusive of steel rails. To make this quantity in Canada 750,000 tons of iron ore, 120,000 tons of limestone and 750,000 tons of coal would be required."

We thus learn, as from other sources, that an equal quantity of ore and coal is required. The limestone may be left out of consideration, as it is upon the spot. What reason is there why it should not be as feasible to bring the coal to the ore as to take the ore to the coal? If it pays United States capitalists to buy up our ores, as they are doing, in order to export them, it should pay Canadian capitalists as well to import the coal or coke.

We also see that there is no want of a market for our iron ore or iron. And if we use 250,000 tons of pig iron, it must be remembered that the demand would be increased, for under the wise policy that has just been adopted much partially manufactured iron that is now imported will be produced in Canada.

The free traders may say what they will; Canada is resolved no longer to sacrifice our rich ore that foreigners may have the profit of manufacturing it into iron for us.

In an article fiercely condemning the new iron duties, the Globe says that one reason for its hostility is "because they largely increase the price of one of the commonest necessaries of life." Now wise men learn by the experience of others, and we have the example of the United Kingdom and the United States to guide us. Both countries resolved to build up their iron industries, both countries adopted the expedient of protective duties on iron far higher in amount than ours, and both countries found that they thereby greatly cheapened iron by home manufacture and internal competition. What happened in their experience we may be sure will happen in ours, in spite of the absurd theories of closet philosophers.

Enthusiastic Commercial Annexationists speak of their project as "sweeping away the customs line." If this were so they might more easily defend their course, but the truth is their purpose is not to sweep the customs line "away," but to sweep it further off so as to include the United States while still excluding the rest of the world, not excepting our Mother Country.

BOBCAYGEON.

Fishing.—The fishermen have been having great sport, and enjoying themselves immensely. Mr. Geo. Read and a friend landed an eighteen pound maskalonge, on Tuesday, and had all they could manage not only to get it into the canoe, but to keep it there when it was in. Some good catches have been made in the locks and canal.

Councillor.—The election of a councillor to take the place of the late J. A. Moore, resulted in the return by acclamation of Mr. A. Trotter, a gentleman who will bring good common sense to the deliberations of the Board, and be a useful member of the Council. Our local industries are well represented, and if there are any means of developing those industries, they should now be brought into operation.

Bears.—Mr. Ralph Murdock, of Harvey, is earning for himself the reputation of being the great bear hunter of the district. Within the last few weeks he has trapped three large bears, of the gentleman persuasion, and fully expects to catch another equally as large. It is on the sylvan banks of the Squaw river that Mr. Murdock resides, and within the calm recesses of the forest glades he skilfully lays his snares. After killing the last bear he skinned it, and left the carcass by the trap. On returning the next day he found that the carcass had been dragged away some hundred yards or more, which must have been done by another and very powerful bear. Unless that bear has a peculiar ambition to decorate the door of some city furrier he will retire to some region beyond the reach of Mr. Murdock.—Independent.

CAMPBELLFORD.

Fire in the Township.—A barn belonging to Mr. James Stillman, Seymour west, was burned one night last week. The contents, which consisted of a reaper, a mower, a hay rake, two sleighs and a threshing machine, were also destroyed. There was an insurance of $400 on the barn, in the Commercial, $350 on contents in the Agricultural, and a special of $200 on the threshing machine in the same company. The fire seems to have originated at the hands of an incendiary, as the barn is isolated and a long distance from Mr. Stillman's house, and no one with a lighted pipe had entered it during the day.

A Rare Visitor.—A bear left its quiet haunts in the back country and during a long march strayed upon the lands in this neighborhood. The cautious visitor seems to have had as its companion a young cub, as the latter was seen by two persons, at different times, in a field about 300 yards west of the station. Bruin walked through a little garden plot belonging to Mr. Frank Nicholas and left foot prints which were traced. Hearing of the presence of the cub, one of our residents armed himself and went to learn of its hiding place, but after watching attentively, and hunting two hours in the adjacent wood, was not rewarded by any signs of its presence. Another party anxious to put a ball into game which always delights the eye of the hunter, repaired to the spot where the foot-prints were seen, and spent several hours waiting with the hope of getting a glimpse of the old bear. Bruin and its offspring are still out walking, however. —Herald.

Lodged in Gaol.

Cincinnati, June 23.—Vice-President Harper and Cashier Hopkins, of the Fidelity Bank, spent to-night in gaol, their bondsmen having surrendered them. Assistant Cashier Baldwin's bondsmen stuck to him. J. L. Wiltshire, the broker who took the checks of the Fidelity Bank to Chicago to try to hold up the market, was arrested to-day charged with aiding and abetting in the wilful and unlawful misapplication of the funds of the bank.

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

GENERAL

Mr. Mackenzie Bowell denies that any retaliatory orders have been issued regarding Americans who live across the line and are employed in Canadian border towns.

Messrs. Robert Barber, of Toronto, ex-Alderman Rocque, of Ottawa, and James R. Brown, of Oshawa, have been appointed inspectors under the Ontario Factory Act.

The failure of Messrs McIver & Barclay, stock brokers, of Montreal, was announced on Friday. The firm were large holders of Montreal Telegraphs stock, to the drop in price of which the failure is attributed.

Messrs. Norquay and Hamilton have returned to Winnipeg from St. Paul. From the fact of the Attorney-General accompanying the Premier, it is believed the object of their visit was the formal completion of a contract with the Northern Pacific railway to connect with the Manitoba line at the boundary.

4. Your committee recommend that the investment for the sinking fund by the County Treasurer of the Ashburnham debentures for $1,200 be approved and confirmed.

5. Your Committee recommend that the sum of $33 be granted the Horticultural Society towards the building of the electric light tower in the Court House Park.

6. Your Committee recommend that the sum of $25 be granted towards repairing the Young's Point road, on condition that the Township of Douro grant an equal amount, and that the Commissioner for the expenditure of the same be the Reeve of Douro.

7. Your Committee recommend that the demand of the East and West Riding License Commissioners for $786 40 and $590 respectively is satisfactory.

8. That Mr. D. W. Dumble be granted the sum of $100 in full settlement of his salary for the present year with this Council and that he be paid the sum of $200, his salary for last year.

9. Your Committee recommend that the County Treasurer be instructed to demand from the Town of Peterborough all fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed under the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, prior to the 15th day of November, 1887, and received by them but not heretofore paid to this County, and that Mr. D. W. Dumble be instructed if necessary to take legal proceedings to collect the same, on the refusal of the Town to pay over the amount.

10. Your Committee recommend that the sum of $50 be allowed Mr. Geo. Edmison, County Police Magistrate, for necessary rent, fuel, &c., as provided by law.

11. Your Committee recommend that all County officers ordering books, papers and other accounts to be paid by this County shall do so through the County Treasurer.

15 That the County Treasurer be instructed to furnish instructions to Justices and Constables as to the proper mode of making and rendering their accounts upon the arrest of prisoners, &c.

13. Your Committee recommend that the payment of the accounts hereto annexed by the Treasurer be confirmed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. R. KIDD,
Chairman.

Peterborough, June 25th, 1887.

Mr. WALSH moved, seconded by Mr. BURNHAM,—That the report be referred back with instructions to strike out the grant to the Protestant Home because the Town Council disapproves of expenditure for the purpose for which it was recommended, and for the further reason that on account of the attitude of Town Council towards the County in regard to Scott Act fines this Council will not make grants to town institutions.—Carried.

Mr. ELMHIRST moved, seconded by Mr. Finlay,—That the report be referred back to make the grant to the Police Magistrate for rent, fuel, blanks, etc., $100, instead of $50, and that the words "as provided by law" be struck out.—Carried.

The report as amended was adopted.

BY-LAWS.

By-laws were introduced and passed confirming the reports of the various committees, the Road and Bridge Committee report being again changed by striking out the words appointing the Reeve of Smith commissioner for the expenditure of the money on the Buckhorn road.

YOUNG'S POINT BRIDGE.

Mr. FITZGERALD moved, seconded by Mr. LANG,—That Geo. J. Chalmers be paid $50 for planking the Young's point bridge, in full settlement and without prejudice to the County's position in regard to the bridge.

Mr. MOLONEY said that this was a Government bridge and they should not pay for it. If the Government would not pay it because they had not ordered the work, the County could stand on its dignity too.

After further discussion the motion was carried on the following division:—

YEAS—Messrs. Walsh, Moore, Mansfield, Crow Kidd Finlay, Elmhirst, Wilde, Lang, Brown and Fitzgerald.—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Moloney, Garbutt, Hicks, Burnham, Crough, Strickland, Forster and Sanderson.—8.

COUNTY ARBITRATOR.

A by-law re-appointing Mr. Carnegie County Arbitrator for justice accounts, &c., was passed.

ARREARS.

Mr. MOLONEY moved, seconded by Mr. FINLAY,—That when municipalities are in arrears in the County rate the County Treasurer take steps to collect it, unless they give a guarantee for interest.

Mr. BROWN moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. ELMHURST.—That the Municipalities of Belmont, Burleigh and Harvey be not required to pay interest until May 1st.

Mr. KIDD asked that Dummer be added.

The amendment was lost and the motion was adopted.

The Council then adjourned.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc.

The Hottentot smiled. "It is quite true, baas. Bad news flies like a bird," and he picked himself up and slipped off to his work.

Notwithstanding the apparent impossibility of the thing, John was considerably disturbed, knowing the extraordinary speed with which news does travel among Kaffirs; more swiftly, indeed, than the swiftest mounted messenger can bear it. Leaving Bessie, who was also somewhat alarmed, he went in search of Silas Croft, and, finding him in the garden, told him what Jantje had said. The old man did not know what to make of the tale, but, remembering Frank Muller's threats, he shook his head.

"If there is any truth in it that villain Muller has a hand in it," he said. "I'll go to the house and see Jantje. Give me your arm, John."

He obeyed, and, on getting to the top of the steep path, perceived the stout figure of old Hans Coetzee, who had been his host at the shooting party, ambling along on his fat little pony.

"Ah," said old Silas, "here is the man who will tell us if there is anything in it all."

"Good day, Om Coetzee, good day!" he shouted out in his stentorian tone. "What news do you bring with you?"

The jolly looking Boer rolled awkwardly off his pony before answering, and, throwing the reins over its head, came to meet them.

"Allemachter, Om Silas, it is bad news. You have heard of the bymakaar (meeting) at Paarde Kraal. Frank Muller wanted me to go, but I would not, and now they have declared war on the British government, and sent a proclamation to Lanyon. There will be fighting, Om Silas; the land will run with blood, and the poor rooibaatjes will be shot down like buck."

"The poor Boers, you mean," growled John, who did not like to hear her majesty's army talked of in terms of regretful pity.

Om Coetzee shook his head with the air of one who knew all about it, and then turned an attentive ear to Silas Croft's version of Jantje's story.

"Allemachter!" groaned Coetzee, "what did I tell you? The poor rooibaatjes shot down like buck, and the land running with blood. And now that Frank Muller will draw me into it, and I shall have to go and shoot the poor rooibaatjes, and I can't miss; try as hard as I will, I can't miss. And when we have shot them all I suppose Burgers will come back, and he is krankish (mad). Yes, yes; Lanyon is bad, but Burgers is worse," and the comfortable old man almost shrieked at the troubles in which he foresaw he would be involved, and finally took his departure by a bridle path over the mountain, saying that, as things had turned out, he would not like it to be known that he had been calling on an Englishman.

"John," said Silas Croft, suddenly, "you must go up to Pretoria and fetch Jess. Mark my words, the Boers will besiege Pretoria, and if we don't get her down at once she will be shut up there."

"Oh, no," cried Bessie, in sudden alarm, "I cannot let John go."

"I am sorry to hear you talk like that, Bessie, when your sister is in danger," answered her uncle, rather sternly; "but there, I dare say that it is natural. I will go myself. Where is Jantje? I shall want the Cape cart and the four gray horses."

"No, uncle dear, John shall go. I was not thinking what I was saying. It seemed—a little hard at first."

"Of course I must go," said John. "Don't fret, dear; I shall be back in five days. Those four horses can go sixty miles a day for that time, and more. They are fat as butter, and there is lots of grass along the road if I can't get forage for them. Besides, the cart will be nearly empty, so I can carry a muid of mealies and fifty bundles of forage with me. I will take that Zulu boy, Mouti (medicine), with me. He does not know much about horses, but he is a plucky fellow, and would stick by one at a pinch. One can't rely on Jantje; he is always sneaking off somewhere, and would be sure to get drunk just as one wanted him."

"Yes, yes, John, that's right, that's right," said the old man. "I will go and see about having the horses got up and the wheels greased. Where is the castor oil, Bessie? There is nothing like castor oil for these patent axles. You ought to be off in an hour. You had better sleep at Luck's to-night; you might get farther, but Luck's is a good place to stop, and they will look after you well there, and you can be off by 3 in the morning and be at Heidelberg by 10 o'clock to-morrow night and in Pretoria by the next afternoon," and he bustled off to make the necessary preparations.

"Oh, John," said Bessie, beginning to cry, "I don't like your going at all among those wild Boers. You are an English officer, and if they find you out they will shoot you. You don't know what brutes some of them are when they think it safe to be so. Oh, John, John, I can't bear your going."

"Cheer up, my dear," said John, "and for Heaven's sake stop crying, for I can't bear it. I must go. Your uncle would never forgive me if I didn't, and, what is more, I should never forgive myself. There is nobody else to go, and we can't leave Jess to be shut up there in Pretoria—for months perhaps. As for the risk, of course there is a bit of risk, but I must take it. I am not afraid of risks—at least I used not to be, but you have made a bit of a coward of me, Bessie dear. There, give me a kiss, old girl, and come and help me to pack my things. Please God I shall get back all right, and Jess with me, in a week from now."

Whereon Bessie, being a sensible and eminently practical young woman, dried her tears, and with a cheerful face, albeit her heart was heavy enough, set to work with a will to make every preparation she could think of. The few clothes John was going to take with him were packed in a Gladstone bag, and the box that was arranged underneath the movable seat in the Cape cart was filled with the tinned provisions that are so much used in South Africa, and all the other little arrangements, small in themselves, but of such infinite importance to the traveler in a wild country, were duly attended to by her careful hands.

LEADING NEWSPAPERS.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, have just issued a pamphlet of 108 pages, in which they have undertaken to select about 2,000 out of the 15,420 newspapers named in the last issue of the American Newspaper Directory, and to assure the public that the selections made are sufficient for the most extensive advertiser's wants. It is claimed that, although they are in number only about one eighth, yet they actually print more than seven-eighths of all the copies issued by the entire press of America.

The Newspaper Advertising Bureau of Geo. P. Rowell & Co. has been established twenty-two years, and twelve years ago the New York Times said of it: "They have the satisfaction of controlling the most extensive and complete advertising connection which has ever been secured, and one which would be hardly possible in any other country but this. They have succeeded in working down a complex business into so thoroughly a systematic method that no change in the newspaper system of America can escape notice, while the widest information upon all topics interesting to advertisers is placed readily at the disposal of the public."

The Advertising Agencies have generally assumed to represent all newspapers; but now the number of newspapers is so great that no one house can undertake to do so much, and Messrs. Rowell & Co., recognizing the necessity for drawing a line somewhere, have decided to devote their energies towards furthering the interests of the best papers; those which are most likely to bring satisfactory results to an advertiser in return for his investment for space in their columns. It is asserted that through the agency of Messrs. Rowell & Co. and two others, advertisers are now placing a patronage which amounts to between three and six thousand dollars for every day of the year. In a consideration of this subject the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, in an editorial of December 19th, 1885, says: "The office, outfit, and requisite plant for a first-class agency in New York cost at least $100,000 investment, and a weekly pay roll of $1,000. There is no doubt in our mind, after forty years' experience, that such an agency as that of Geo. P. Rowell & Co. is better for the advertiser and for the newspaper than any special, exclusive agency. The newspapers combine in what is termed an associated press, by which nine-tenths of the news is gathered. Why should they not also have their advertising gathered by single large agencies in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, etc.? Such co-operation reduces the expense. It does the work for the advertiser more satisfactorily and cheaply, while it gives the publisher greater interest."

Bradstreet's, the commercial paper published by the Bradstreet Agency of the same name, lately said: "The resolution that Rowell & Co. brought about, a score of years ago, created the advertising agency as now conducted. They, very early in their career, established an unquestioned credit, and many an outside publisher was better pleased to get an order from this firm at a low rate than from other firms at a much higher one. They do not try to allure any one into any line of advertising. They will, however, furnish him by all odds the most reliable data on which to base his decision. They will see that he gets the full value of any money he wishes to spend. Only in such an office, backed up with such a long-continued, well-developed organization, can the true and unprejudiced information be ascertained. The records of the firm will show that it holds the patronage of its customers as long and as satisfactorily as does almost any firm in any branch of business. Concerns who were patrons twenty years ago, are patrons to day. It is the accumulation of old customers, not the getting of transient or new customers, that would warrant a concern like this to go systematically to work to earn the good-will of the newspaper world."

The Philadelphia Record of Dec. 2nd, 1885, having the largest daily circulation south of New York and published by Mr. W. M. Singerly, the President of the American Publishers' Association, says: "The great advertising agencies are an outgrowth of necessity to those who seek the newspapers and to the newspapers which seeks the advertiser. The millions of dollars sent annually to newspapers, hundreds, and even thousands of miles from the advertisers, must eventually find a system of intelligent distribution which relieves the latter of the expense of individual investigation, and the former of the risks involved in the acceptance of doubtful customers. Well the system has come along with the demand and, with the history of the progress of national advertising upon scientific principles, the name of George P. Rowell & Co. will always be inseparably linked." To the advertisers in a small way—that is in a comparatively small way—one need not ponder long to see what an advantage such an institution really is. It would be impossible, it is impossible, for such individuals or firms, enterprising as they may be, to attempt profitably to obtain from the vastly diversified sections of the country such information as such an agency can furnish them at once and without cost. To the more extensive, to the colossal advertiser, indeed, the advantages of such an institution are too manifest to need explanation.

It has been asserted that however valuable a good advertising agency may be, it is true of them as of newspapers, that it is possible to have too many, if the quality is not kept up to a high standard, and how to accomplish this in either case is a question to which a great deal of thought has been devoted.

There is at present a decided tendency towards organization in every line of business, and acting upon a suggestion of the American Publishers' Association at its meeting at Rochester, N. Y., in February, Messrs. Rowell & Co. have taken steps toward the formation of an Association of the leading houses conducting a business similar to their own.

This will be an effort to lift the best established and most useful agencies so far above those of a sort which have proved unsatisfactory, that publishers will cease to think of and discuss them as all of one class, being furnished with such information as will enable them to consider and treat with each upon individual merits. It will lead to the discussion of business methods, with a view to eliminating such as are mischievous.

As advertising business is now done, the Advertising Agent is the great producer of advertising. From motives of self-interest he is continually urging new advertisers into the field and using his special knowledge to give the advertiser the best return possible for his money, that he may reap a profit, develop and extend his advertising transactions.

It is impossible at present to state what will be the ultimate scope of the organization or the width of its membership. It should begin with the stronger agencies and allow its wider extension to be a matter of future discussion and decision.

It is not contemplated that any publisher should be asked to cut off any agent with whom he is now dealing on satisfactory terms; but that he should exercise so much caution as would prevent adding new names to his list before being satisfied that the doing so would be of service rather than harm.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to state that among the selected papers which Geo. P. Rowell & Co. specially recommend the Peterborough Daily and Weekly REVIEW (the only journal in the list published at Peterborough, Ont.,) is accorded an appropriate place.

Ladies' and children's parasols cheap, an extensive range to select from at Turnbull's.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Larry Donovan, the jumper, was prevented by the London police from jumping off the Clifton Suspension bridge on Jubilee day. He was taken in custody charged with attempting suicide. He was discharged next day on furnishing securities that he would make no further effort to jump from the bridge.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled. Dr. Thos. Prim, Ala., says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child eight months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

At the annual distribution of prizes in connection with St. Michael's College, Toronto, Mr. D. J. Scollard, of Ennismore, took a highly creditable place. In classics he received 1st class honors; in natural philosophy he stood second, in mental philosophy he took first class honors. He took the St. Michael's Library Association prize and received honorable mention as a debater.

Reading and Writing.

Mr. D. W. Dumble has presented a ten dollar gold piece, to be presented to the best reader attending the Collegiate Institute. The competition will take place to-morrow, the Rev. F. H. Wallace, M.A., B.D., acting as judge. Mr. Stevenson, Chairman of the Board of Education, has signified his willingness to give a similar prize to the best penman.

The Magic Queen.

"Zozo, the Magic Queen," a rhapsody of song, wit, gay costumes and beautiful scenery, was presented at Bradburn's Opera House on Saturday evening. It is a grotesque mixture of mortal and immortal, a bringing together of the fanciful scenes of fairyland and the everyday talk of New York. The performance was very interesting throughout. The choruses and solos were well taken and loudly applauded. The en passant novelties were quite sparkling. The dancing of the fairies was graceful, the musket drill precise and exact, and the skipping rope act a marvel of dexterity.

OUR RIVER.

To the Editor of the Review.

DEAR SIR,—Why is our river stopped up with a boom? We have not been able to paddle down to the Little Lake for over a week in our canoes, nor has the steamboat been up to the Peterborough wharf during the past week. This must be a great detriment to the trade on the river, more particularly as there were two excursions during the week, and they had to land at the Ashburnham wharf. Is there nobody to look after our waters here? Are those who take pleasure in boating to be deprived of all our summer months? It is bad enough to have our lake filled up with sawdust, without having our river blocked with logs and booms. A drive has been in the lake the last week, and, instead of letting their logs bag out at the cemetery point they shut up the passage and allowed no floating craft to go through. A passage way should be left and the boom opened when necessary.

Yours,
A CANOEIST

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

A Sovereign's Acknowledgement of Gratitude to Her People.

LONDON, June 26.—The Home Secretary has received the following letter from the Queen:—"I am anxious to express to my people my warm thanks far the kind, more than kind, reception I met with going to and returning from Westminster Abbey, with all my children and grandchildren. The enthusiastic reception I met with then, as well as on these eventful days in London, and as at Windsor on the occasion of the Jubilee, touched me most deeply. It has shown that the labour and anxiety of 50 long years 22 of which was spent in untroubled happiness shared and cheered by my beloved husband, and while an equal number were full of sorrow and trials, borne without his sheltering arm and wise help, have been appreciated by my people. This feeling and a sense of duty towards my dear country and my subjects, who are so unseparably bound up with my life, will encourage me in my task, often a very difficult and arduous one, during the remainder of my life. The wonderful order preserved on this occasion, and the good behaviour of the enormous multitude assembled, merit my highest admiration. That God may protect and abundantly bless my country is my fervent prayer."

BOLD BURGLARS.

A County Constable and Forty Citizens Overawed by Three Thieves.

BELLEVILLE, June 25.—Yesterday evening County Constable Garratt and a posse of about forty citizens of Frankford went in pursuit of three burglars who have been in that vicinity lately. The men were found in a barn on McCambridge's farm, and on the approach of the crowd one of the burglars opened the door and with a revolver in his hand ordered them back. All but two retreated, and they exchanged shots with the burglars, but they also took their departure on a bullet passing through the hat of one of them. The burglars afterwards left the barn, but, were not pursued.

Death of Mr. Cimon, M.P.

OTTAWA, June 26.—Intelligence was received this morning of the death of Mr. Cimon, M. P. for Charlevoix, which event took place suddenly yesterday. In politics the late Mr. Cimon was a Conservative, but bolted on the Riel question, and almost invariably voted against the Government last session.

FATAL FIRE.

LONDON, June 26.—A fire broke out in a tenement house off Oxford street this morning, and the flames spread so rapidly that several of the inmates were unable to make their escape. Several frightful scenes were witnessed by the enormous crowds of people that had been attracted to the spot. One youth jumped from the top storey to the ground and was instantly killed. His mother followed him. In her descent she struck on the railings in front of the house and rebounded on the heads of the crowd. She was conveyed to an hospital. Another woman appeared at a window holding a child in her arms. A moment later she fell backward into the flames. The charred remains of herself and two children were afterwards discovered.

The Evangelistic Tent.

Mr. Marshall, evangelist, conducted two meetings on Sunday in the tent between George street and Denne's mill. The tent will hold about 350 people and is supplied with seats. At 4 o'clock Mr. Marshall took as his text Isaiah, liii, 6, and at 8 o'clock he spoke from John iii, 16, delivering two very effective addresses. There was a large audience on each occasion, the tent being filled, and hundreds gathered outside and enjoyed the service. Mr. Irving will arrive to-day. The meeting this evening will be held at eight o'clock, and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

Decoration Day.

Arrangements have been made to make the decoration ceremony, which will take place to-morrow, as signal a success as it has been in former years. People going to the cemetery will have the opportunity of going by boat. The Golden Eye will ply between the Cemetery and the Wolfe street wharf during the afternoon.

Wizard Oil.

The Wizard Oil Concert Company draw large audiences on the market square each night. The performances are of merit, the vocalists being considerably above the ordinary. The quartettes are especially well rendered. Dr. C. S. Ritz, the manager and lecturer, sets forth the merits of the "ile."

Their Jubilee Year.

KINGSTON, June 25.—Colonel Cubitt and Lieut.-Colonel Boulton will celebrate their jubilee year in the militia during the present camp. It is expected that the officers will tender them a jubilee dinner and that the officers in the third military district will be invited to attend. Both the commanding officers named are very popular.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

T. DOLAN & CO.

Remember the whole Dry Goods Stock Must be Sold.

ODDFELLOWS! ATTENTION!

We have opened this morning a special shipment of Silk Hats in English and American shapes, ranging in price from $3.75 to $6.00.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1887.

THE PEOPLE'S GOOD WILL

The Rev. I. Tovell Waited Upon on Monday Evening.

On Monday evening an event happened which could not fail to be very gratifying to the Rev. I. Tovell and Mrs. Tovell. At about nine o'clock a large number of the members of the congregation called at the parsonage, McDonell street, and until a quarter past nine others followed. They were there for the purpose of giving their pastor and his wife proof of the esteem in which the congregation held them. At about a quarter after nine o'clock Geo. Hilliard, Esq., ex-M.P., who had been chosen as the representative of the congregation, addressed himself to the Rev. Mr. Tovell. He spoke of the profit and pleasure the people of the George Street Methodist Church took in the ministry of their pastor for the last three years. The congregation, he said, had experienced regret that the time had come for their separation as pastor and people. Still, though the people regretted that the pastoral relationship should be broken, they were rejoiced to know that the faithful ministrations through the interchange of pulpits, would be continued in the future as in the past. The speaker referred to Mrs. Tovell in kind terms, and assured both that they would be followed to their new field of labor in this town with earnest prayers that their work in the church would continue to be blessed of God. As an humble token of the good will and appreciation in which both Mr. and Mrs. Tovell were held by their many friends, he had the honor, in their behalf, to present them with a tea set, and he hoped that they would long enjoy the use of it.

The members of the congregation having charge of the silverware then presented it. The set is a very handsome one. It consists of a tea pot, coffee pot, sugar bowl, slop bowl, cream jug and a beautiful berry dish with amberine lining and a gold lined berry spoon. The set has a satin finish, is hand engraved and has patent non conductor handles.

The Rev. I. TOVELL, in reply, said that they were not altogether taken by surprise in the visit made to their home, as they received a little hint that the parsonage was to be besieged this evening, and although the tokens of their good will were rich and elegant, yet they were not altogether taken by surprise in this either. The gifts presented to them were not so much in proportion to their merits as it was in proportion to the goodness and largness of the people's hearts. It was a source of great pleasure to them to have their presence here to-night and to have thus reassurance of their friendship, and though they would prize this gift much, yet the underlying kindness that had prompted the giving of it would be their greatest treasure. Whenever they looked upon it it would remind them of friends whom they held dear and ever would hold dear. It would bring to mind the lines "the friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, grapple them to thy heart with hooks of steel." His past ministry among them was lightened by their continued fidelity, and his future ministry among them, he felt assured, would be also. In his new charge they had been warmly welcomed by leading members of the congregation and he felt that their labors would be blessed, and would be a joy by the will of God.

In justice to Mrs. Tovell, he thanked them for their kindly consideration in including her in the gift with himself. During the past she had had anxious cares, but their good will and prayers, and this fresh expression of their regard, would help to lighten her heart and strengthen her for the position which she occupies in the church. He trusted that God might keep them by His grace, and that in the end they might all have the unspeakable safactiontis of gathering together, when their work was done, at the Father's right hand, to be crowned with immortal glory through Christ their Redeemer.

During the evening Mrs. Daly and Mrs. Hamilton sang several appropriate songs. The Rev. Mr. Tovell gave out the hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds Our Hearts in Christian Love." After singing this, prayer was offered, and the exercises of a delightful hour were closed. After warm handshaking the friends returned to their homes.

LABOR RIOT IN ROCHESTER.

Attacks on Non-Unionists—Fired on by the Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 27.—At seven o'clock this morning nearly every laborer in the city left his work at the command of several union laborers, and a general strike was inaugurated for nine hours' work at $1.75 per day. The strikers number about 400, and are principally Mecklenburgers, as they are termed. As soon as the men left work the contractors succeeded in inducing a few non-union men to go on with the work. Late in the forenoon a squad of strikers appeared in parts of the city where the non-unionists were working, and in many cases forced them off. At the sewer on Goodman street the strikers tried to stop an engineer, when a cloud of steam was thrown on them, and after a sharp fight they were driven off. This afternoon serious trouble occurred on Gorham street, which is being improved. A mob of 200 began intimidating the men at work there. Three policemen endeavoured to disperse them, but failed, and an additional squad of police was sent to help. The mob began stoning the officers, who finding their clubs useless, opened fire with revolvers, finally clearing the street. Two policemen were severely injured by stones, and three strikers were badly clubbed and arrested. One man was shot through the upper part of the head. It is now learned two others were shot, but had been carried away by friends. One of these is now reported as dead. The city is quiet to-night, but serious trouble is feared.

BRUTAL ASSAULT.

A Wife Beater Clubs an Esteemed Citizen at Belleville.

The Belleville Intelligencer says:—On Saturday Mr. J. P. Thompson, of the firm of Brignall & Thompson, dry goods merchants, was assaulted by a man named Geo. Irvine, who in a drunken fury attacked him with a club. Mr. Thompson was on his way to the store after the evening meal, when he was met in the street, near his own door, by Irvine, who lives in the next house, and who has entertained ill feelings towards him since in May. Irvine was under the influence of liquor and accused Mr. Thompson of informing the police that he had illused his wife on May 24th and followed it up by hitting him over the head with a club. Mr. Thompson was stunned by the blow and fell to the ground. Irvine sprang upon him and dealt him another brutal blow over the top of the head and, in his drunken frenzy, was in the act of repeating it, when Mr. W. N. Ponton, who happened to be driving by at the moment, sprang from the carriage and struck Irvine in the face with his whip. The butt end was used freely upon Irvine's head, until he was finally knocked down. Others arrived about this time, when Mr. Thompson was conducted into his house and medical aid summoned to dress the wounds on his head.

Drowned at Three Rivers.

THREE RIVERS, June 27.—Friday afternoon four collegians, with their professor, went to the island at the mouth of the St. Maurice river, and went in bathing. One of the number, Ozanie Melancon, was seen to sink and did not rise. Every effort was made to rescue the unfortunate fellow, but without success. The body was recovered a little after six, and the coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental drowning. Deceased was nineteen years old and had just finished his classical course, having obtained his B. A.

A Valuable Invention.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Mail says under date June 27th:—Mr. Davin, M. P., and other gentlemen interested in agriculturel, to-day examined the beautiful model of a machine lately patented by Mr. Robert Romaine, of the House of Commons stationary office. It is called the modern steam farmer, and is intended to do nearly all the work of a farm without the aid of horse labor far more cheaply and thoroughly, than it is performed by present methods. It is a plough, harrow, scarifier, horse hoe, cultivator and binder and thresher in one, the great principle underlying the inital stages of cultivation being that the operations of tillage are conducted by a rotatory motion instead of by sliding or dragging. The beauties of the machine were fully explained by Mr Romaine to the gentlemen present, all of whom were greatly impressed with its capacity for large farming. The Government is being urged to give it a trial on the branch experimental farm in the North-West. Mr. Romaine will be in Toronto in a few days to exhibit his method to the farmers of the County of York.

The Peterborough Cavalry.

In describing the review at the Kingston camp the Whig says the third regiment of cavalry came up first. The horses in this corps are in excellent condition, and are Wridden by young men who make it a point to present a good appearance on the field. Their arms and outfits were in excellent order.

FOR harvest mitts at bed-rock prices, call at TURNBULL'S.

MR. PARNELL'S HEALTH.

Under Treatment by a Specialist—Refuses to Reveal His Disease.

LONDON, June 27.—Mr. Parnell looks wasted, worn and fatigued, and is extremely nervous, although he always appears in very good spirits, and when asked about his illness laughingly passes it off to another more agreeable subject. If pressed about his health he gets very much annoyed and won't admit to anyone that there is anything more serious than an ordinary bronchial attack; but the fact is he has had a most serious bronchial attack, besides touches of Bright's disease and liver complaint. His family doctor, Dr. Kenney, M. P., has forbidden him to go out after sundown, as any slight easterly wind might aggravate his illness. He has been only once inside the House since Friday week, when the Crimes Bill was rushed through. He always appears, even in June, with a warm scarf around his throat. The strange thing is that Mr. Parnell, knowing but not admitting that he is very ill, is being treated by a London specialist for some unknown disease, so that not to his most intimate colleagues will he disclose the specialist's name. He even goes so far as to refuse to tell Dr. Kenney himself, who is very anxious to know. There has been some idea among several medical men that he is suffering from softening of the brain, but that cannot be, as he has never been more keen and mentally capable than lately. There is not a particle of truth in the rumour that Mr. Justin McCarthy soon takes the leadership of the Irish party, as Mr. Parnell persists in saying that he will soon be better and insists on leading his party in the House.

THE PRINCES IN DUBLIN.

Arrival of Prince Albert Victor and Prince George—Warmly Welcomed.

DUBLIN, June 27.—Business was conducted to-day as usual, and Dublin did not seem to take much of a holiday over the arrival of Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales. The corporation council will hold aloof from participation in the celebration. There was, however, sufficient display of bunting in the streets and of bustle among the Loyalists to indicate that there was public interest in the event. A military escort and a number of Crown officials and prominent people awaited the Princes at Kingstown. Several steamers went down the bay to meet and escort the royal boat. The Princes arrived at the appointed time, and were received with great enthusiasm. The Marquis of Londonderry met them and the Kingstown commissioners presented them with an address. Upon their arrival in Dublin they were presented with an address of welcome by the Conservative citizens. One of the sentiments expressed in this address was as follows:—"We welcome the grandsons of her Majesty the Queen, under whom Ireland has enjoyed the blessings of just laws, true liberty and constitutional government." Prince Albert Victor responded to the address, and then he and his brother with their party proceeded to the viceregal lodge. During the journey through the streets there was much cheering by the crowds, and cries of "Coercion" and cheering for Mr. Parnell.

THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION.

A Secret Arrangement with the Sultan—The Difficulty Solved.

LONDON, June 27.—The Egyptian question, which was so positively announced a few weeks ago as settled, has been growing more unsettled ever since. Until now it is in a nebulous state, in which its exact shape and bearing are difficult to make out. The treaty which came so near being signed that its signature was actually announced as a fact, much to the financial betterment of speculators who were long of Egyptian consols, has hung fire until now it is understood that Lord Salisbury's Government no longer cares to sign it at all. They will content themselves with a secret understanding with the Porte that if British troops are substantially withdrawn from Egypt, Great Britain shall have the exclusive right to occupy the country if such action ever again becomes a military necessity. This way out of the difficulty is welcomed by the Sultan, who has been greatly perplexed as to the advisable course for him to pursue.

A Georgia Rip Van Winkle.

A. McD. Wilson, a wholesale merchant, of Atlanta, Ga., who does business with people in the remotest parts of Georgia received a mortgage for a debt on a negro man a few days ago from a customer in Gilmer County. The maker of the mortgage was evidently not aware that slavery had been abolished.

Mr. John Miller, of Scrabster, proprietor of Davidson's Buildings Thurso, has intimated that for the rest of their lives the tenants thereof, numbering ten, are to be allowed to sit rent free, and the last half year's rent, which some of them had paid, is to be handed back.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

THE GERMAN EMPEROR.

LONDON, June 27.—The departure of the Emperor William from Berlin for Ems is delayed by business, not illness. The Emperor has recovered sufficient strength to travel the short distance to Ems without danger of a collapse. A large number of state papers, accumulated during his illness, require his signature, and he thus has been detained for a day or two.

THE EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

LONDON, June 26.—The time set for signing the Egyptian convention expires to morrow. It is asserted if the Sultan does not sign that Sir Henry Wolff will depart from Constantinople immediately.

RUSSIAN POLICY.

BRUSSELS, June 26.—Le Nord, the Russian organ, denies the report that Russia is willing to accept the Anglo-Turkish convention concerning Egypt if England will accept the Prince of Mingrelia as Prince of Bulgaria. The paper declares that Russia will execute her policy and won't bargain about it.

GLADSTONE PLANS.

LONDON, June 26.—The Gladstonians approve of the speedy passage through the remaining stages of the Crimes bill in order to confine to the report stage the discussion of the only prominent amendments. They will then concentrate their attention on the Land bill.

MEETING UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

DUBLIN, June 26.—County Sheriff Hamilton called a meeting of Loyalists for to-day to be held in the Green street Court House, which belongs to the city. Sheriff Hamilton and a party of friends having entered the building, the city Sheriff locked them in, preventing the audience from entering. Sheriff Hamilton appeared at an upper window, and amid much laughter explained the predicament, and announced that the meeting could be held in the Court of Queen's Bench. The Loyalists accordingly proceeded to the place named and held the meeting.

ROYALTY IN IRELAND.

LONDON, June 27.—Prince Albert Victor's visit to Ireland to-day is not likely to be a triumphal tour. The state of Irish feeling toward the reigning houses would seem to have called for the selection of a more experienced ambassador and one who is known to have the tact necessary to come successfully through embarrassing situations. It is, perhaps, hoped that the very youth and inexperience of the Prince will be his best protection among the generous-hearted people. The closing of the Green street court house by the Sheriff of Dublin, however, is an indication of the cool reception the Prince is likely to meet with in that city, as it prevented the preparation of an address of welcome to His Royal Highness.

MISSION TO IRELAND.

LONDON, June 27.—The Chronicle's Rome despatch says:—"The Pope has ordered a delay in the departure of Monsignor Persico for Ireland."

KING LEOPOLD IN LONDON.

LONDON, June 27.—King Leopold, of Belgium, visited the East London Children's hospital on Saturday and had shown to him a baby fifteen days old and weighing but two pounds. The King afterwards visited the People's Palace, recently inaugurated by the Queen. He was much impressed by it, and said he should urge all cities to copy London in founding such establishments for the people. Subsequently His Majesty laid the corner stone of the library building to be attached to the People's Palace.

THE YACHT RACE.

LONDON June 27.—The Genesta arrived at Dover at 5.15 a. m. She trusted chiefly to the tide in entering Dover and missed her pier, having to make two small tacks. The sea was perfectly calm. A light wind was blowing.

FROM ROME.

BERLIN, June 27.—A despatch from Rome to the Germania says: Mgr. Persico's mission to Ireland is due to the Pope's desire, after declining to interfere in Irish affairs to give England a proof of his good will. The same despatch says the absence of English Catholics from the jubilee service in Westminster Abbey was due to their attendance being prohibited by the Propaganda.

DUBLIN'S LORD MAYOR.

DUBLIN, June 27.—At Mr. Parnell's request Mr. Gill, who was nominated for Lord Mayor, has withdrawn in favor of Mr. Sexton.

PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

DUBLIN, June 27.—The tenants on the Kingston estates, Mitchelltown, have resolved to resist evictions: Mr. Wm. O'Brien will shortly visit the tenants.

FRANCE AND RUSSIA.

LONDON, June 27.—The Morning Post says: The Egyptian negotiations have reached an acute stage. France threatens to break off diplomatic relations with the Porte and resume her claims regarding the protection of the Oriental holy places if the convention be ratified, while Russia demands recompense in the direction of Erzeroum. The Porte therefore asks England whether, in the event of the ratification of the convention, Turkey can rely upon the fulfilment of the convention relating to Cyprus. A reply to this note has not yet been received at Constantinople.

A WARNING.

The Lutheran Synod Pronounces Against Anarchists and Socialists.

CHICAGO, June 27.—The Augustana Synod, the representative body of the Lutheran Church in North America, which has been in session here for a week past, has promulgated the following resolution, which, with others on different subjects, were adopted during the session:—That with reference to Anarchists, Socialists and affiliated workingmen's societies, we, as an Evangelical Lutheran Synod, affirm the principle that the Christian, social and political liberty of the individual is one of the most precious rights of every man which we deem it our duty to defend by all lawful means, and that we, therefore, most earnestly warn our members against joining or in any wise supporting such associations of whatsoever name.

A Church Floor Gives Way.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 28.—A temporary flooring under the Concordia Church, at Brockport, gave way during the service yesterday afternoon, precipitating a large number of people to the cellar. About twenty people were injured. One of them, Charles Schrader, will probably die.

RIP VAN WINKLE ON THE TRENT.

THOUGH we have thought that the Trent waters would soon be far more useful as a channel for commerce than the Hudson, we have hitherto supposed that the New YORK stream had the superiority in legendary and supernatural interest. Now, however, we have the satisfaction of knowing that our magnificent chain of waters is on an equality in this respect with the Hudson. We can boast it seems of a Rip Van Winkle of our own, who, like his prototype, has just awakened from his long sleep and is amazed to find that the world has not stood still like his own slumbering mind.

Our Canadian Rip, ce being aroused from his magic slumber, seems to have established himself at Oshawa, and assumed the name of Grierson. From this retreat his babblings of what he thought he knew more than half a century ago have been given to the public through the not inappropriate medium of the Toronto Globe, which is itself wont to base the claims of itself and its friends on the episodes of those long bye-gone days.

Our Rip appears, if his memory is to be trusted, to have disported himself on these waters in 1829 and 1832. He visited Balsam Lake, the summit level of the Trent Valley Navigation, and even stood on the spot since made illustrious as the site of the alma mater of Jimmuel Briggs. He was there in intensely hot weather, probably on an autumn fishing trip, and found that there was not much water flowing. On this and similar reminiscenses of what he knew or imagined before his half century of oblivious slumber, our Rip stands amazed at men who have not been asleep but have learned something in fifty years, and on such absurd grounds he decries the Trent Valley Navigation, and endeavours to frustrate the work to which the Government is solemnly pledged, having had is value amply proved to them by the decision of the engineers after most careful investigation.

At the time before our Rip's slumber little was known of lands lying to the north and west of Balsam Lake. In fifty years however, it has become known, has been partly settled and has been thoroughly explored. There is not only this local knowledge, but modern maps and the very full official report of Mr. Stark, C. E., in regard to the Trent Valley Navigation, have some time since made known to everyone but the Van Winkle family that draining into Balsam Lake is a net-work of lakes innumerable, some of them of large size, fed by the abundent rain and snow fall of a wide region of considerable elevation and richly wooded. There is such an enormous water supply for Balsam Lake, the summit level of Trent Valley Navigation, that there is not the slightest reason to fear that it would be insufficient for lockage; it would be as sensible to allege that Lake Simcoe might be run dry. Our local Rip Van Winkle admits that in May the Otonabee was "a mighty torrent." During his half century of oblivion great changes have taken place; there is no longer the rushing flood in the spring nor the low water in the autumn. By a series of dams, some erected by the Government and others by lumbermen, the flood waters are stored up and the flow throughout the year is thus regulated. At present there is ample water every month of the year for lockage and power for a thousand mills. If in future generations the navigation of these waters increases enormously, as we hope will be the case, the system of dams to store water in the back lakes can be extended many fold at an insignificant expense.

It is too bad that one who shows the grossest ignorance of his subject, with knowledge easily attainable, should thus endeavor by unfounded objections to thwart the prosecution of an improvement of the greatest value to the people of Canada.

BUILDING FOR FOREIGNERS.

THE Winnipeg advocates of tapping the traffic of the C. P. R. by a short line to the boundary have now openly dropped the pretence that they wished to obtain a competing line to the Canadian Atlantic ports. They now frankly boast that the Northern Pacific has agreed to run a branch to the boundary to continue the proposed line from Winnipeg. Thus the avowed object is to make our own costly trans-continental railway a mere feeder to collect traffic for the railroads and ports of the United States, diverting it from Canada. So it is proposed to repeat as to our railways the unfortunate results of our canal experience, the Welland Canal built at the heavy expense of the people of Canada having so far been a feeder for United States ports rather than for our own. Our neighbors and their friends seem eager to repeat this profitable operation of making us pay for augmenting and facilitating their traffic.

Indians as Soldiers.

KINGSTON, June 25.—Eight Indians from Rice Lake are enrolled in the 40th Battalion, now in camp here, and are highly commended as soldiers by the captain of their company.

Smothered in a Sand Pit.

KINGSTON, June 25.—An old man, named Mitchell, was smothered in a sand pit, near Portsmouth, this morning. He was in a hole when a bank fell upon him, burying him deeply. When taken out he was dead. He was seventy years of age.

The report of the Hudson Bay Company recommends a dividend of 17s. per share, amounting to £85,000. A sum of £32,898 is carried forward.

MONDAY NIGHT'S WORK

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF THE LOCKS BRIDGE.

Ashburnham to be Requested to Foot Its Fire Protection Bill—Scott Act Fines—Magistrate Dumble's Action Criticised.

A regular meeting of the Town Council was held on Monday evening.

There were present His Worship the Mayor, and Councillors Menzies, Moore, McNaughton, McNeil, Davidson, Douglass, Kendry, Kelly, Hartley, Yelland, Stenson and Cahill.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

COBOURG RAILWAY.

The MAYOR announced that in reference to the petition sent to the Government by the Council regarding the Cobourg Railway Bill a clause had been inserted giving them no more power of sale than that given by the Provincial Government. Mr. Pearse, the owner, had disposed of that part of the road from Peterborough to Chemong Lake. The iron on the road could not be sold.

THE LOCK'S BRIDGE.

Mr. Stewart, Warden of the County, Mr. Dawson Kennedy, Mr. Rose and Mr. Deyell waited on the Council asking that the new bridge to be built be not erected at the locks but at the foot of George street. The Grand Trunk were building a railway bridge just above the present Locks bridge, which would make it dangerous for people to cross a bridge at that point. The advantages of erecting the bridge at the site advocated were fully explained.

Councillor MENZIES moved, seconded by Councillor Kendry,—That the proposition of moving the Locks bridge to the foot of George street be referred to a joint Committee of the Town and County Councils to report to this Council.—Carried.

AUDITOR'S REPORT.

Messrs. J. J. Hall and Jas. Stratton, Town Auditors, submitted their report. The only irregularity reported was that of the disposal of the Scott Act fines. They were unable to agree in regard to the Town and County claims.—Finance Committee.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following communication was read:—

From E. A. Peck, on behalf of E. Phelan, protesting against the proposed raising of the Simcoe street bridge as it would be higher than the foot entrance of the hotel, and threatening legal prodeedings if such were done.—Finance Committee.

ACCOUNTS.

The following account was presented:—

J. D. Baptie, doors for fire hall..... $ 45 00

The account was ordered to be paid.

BY-LAW.

A by-law to establish grades on George, Reid, Murray and Smith Streets was introduced. The by-law was read for the first time and the Committee rose with leave to sit again, the plans for the proposed grading being referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

SIDING.

Councillor MOORE moved, seconded by Councillor DOUGLASS—Resolved, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company be and is hereby permitted and authorized to lay and place a branch of their railway track across Dalhousie street between George street and Water street in the Town of Peterborough so as to connect the main line of their railway by a switch over the premises of Mr. John Carnegie known as the "Romaine brick factory," the said railway company to place the said track over the said street in a proper manner with the necessary grading to the track and to plank between the rails, and that the Mayor and Clerk of the Town do sign and seal this resolution to give it the form of a by-law.—Carried.

FIRE PROTECTION.

Councillor MCNEIL moved, seconded by Councillor MCNAUGHTON—That the Clerk prepare a statement of the Village of Ashburnham indebtedness to the town for supplying the said village with fire protection, and ask for a prompt settlement of the same.

Councillor MCNEIL said that an agreement had been entered upon some time ago between the Town and the Village Councils in regard to fire protection, but that no settlement had been made for the past three or four years.

SPAULDINGS BAY.

Councillor MCNAUGHTON brought up the question of Spauldings Bay nuisance. Quantities of nusance had been deposited at the lower end, and the smell was something unendurable.

The MAYOR said it was a shame.

Councillor MENZIES said that a nuisance ground would have to be procured. He complained of people depositing nuisance at the "Goose pond."

Councillor CAHILL moved, seconded by Councillor DAVIDSON—That the Board of Health be instructed to take steps as once to remove the nuisance existing at the south end of Spauldings Bay.—Carried.

Councillor DAVIDSON moved, seconded by Councillor CAHILL—That the Street Inspector be instructed to draw all the coal slack he can get to Rink Street to cover the nuisance existing there.—Carried.

SCOTT ACT FINES.

A motion was introduced to authorize the Finance Committee to proceed against Mr. D. W. Dumble, Police Magistrate, to compel him to pay over an amount of money inflicted as fines, under the Scott Act, the same having been demanded of him.

Councillor MCNEIL, who introduced the motion, said that if Mr. Dumble, a servant of this Town, was going to serve the County at the Town's expense, the sooner they knew it the better.

Councillor MOORE was surprised to see that Mr. Dumble had taken the County's case in hand for the recovery of fines. He was surprised that the Town's servant should assume a hostile position toward the Town.

On account of there being no seconder the motion was dropped.

THE ARBITRATOR.

Councillor CAHILL moved seconded by Councillor MOORE—That the clerk be requested to communicate with the County Council for the purpose of ascertaining who would be acceptable to them as arbitrator between the Town and County or the Administration of Justice, etc., in order that this Council might have an opportunity of complying with them wishes, and that a copy of this resolution be sent in by the County Clerk.

Councillor CAHILL said that, he being appointed arbitrator, the County Council had objected. As he wished to maintain a friendliness to the County Council he moved the resolution.

The motion was carried.

FIRE INSURANCE.

Councillor MCNEIL moved, seconded by Councillor MCNAUGHTON,—That the Clerk write R. McLean, Secretary of the Fire Underwriters' Association, Toronto, asking what action the Association had taken upon the application of this Council, asking to have our insurance rating placed in Class B.—Carried.

SEVEN HUNDRED.

Councillor KENDRY moved, seconded by Councillor HARTLEY,—That the Town Treasurer be instructed to pay to Mr. E. B. Edwards the sum of $700, for services rendered in connection with the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act to 1st May, 1887.

A short discussion followed.

The motion was withdrawn.

FINES UNCOLLECTED.

Councillor MOORE moved, seconded by Councillor YELLAND,—That the members of the police force be required to collect and pay to the Treasurer of the Town without delay the amount of all warrants now in their hands, and that this matter be referred to the Committee on Police Supervision.—Carried.

Councillor MOORE moved, seconded by Councillor DOUGLASS,—That the Street Inspector be instructed to have the thistles and weeds on the sides of the streets cut down.—Carried.

ELECTRIC LIGHT TOWER.

Dr. BURNHAM appeared before the council on behalf of the Horticultural Society requesting the payment of half of the cost of the erection of the electric light tower in the Horticultural Gardens,—$33. The amount was granted.

HOOK AND LADDER TRUCK.

Councillor MCNEIL moved, seconded by Councillor STENSON—That the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee be instructed to have the old hook and ladder truck sold by auction.—Carried.

STREETS.

Councillor DAVIDSON moved, seconded by Councillor MCNAUGHTON,—That a sidewalk be placed on Stewart Street, from Perry Street South to the houses on the east side of said street.

The Council adjourned to meet in three weeks.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

A SLAUGHTER MARKET

These Commercial Union anti-tariff papers, which take such pleasure in pointing to the troubles of a Yankee manufacturer caused by over-production, are clamorous for Canada to do what she can to throw down the barriers which prevents Canada being flooded with the surplussage of Yankee manufacturers. With a capacity to produce very largely in excess of the power of that country to consume, what could Canadian manufacturers hope for or how could they expect their industries to survive under a reciprocity treaty which would admit the free importation of the surplussage of Yankee mills and work shops?—Canadian Manufacturer.

THE FARMERS' MARKET.

Let it not be forgotten that the home market is the principal market. Our farmers sell ten dollars' worth of stuff for home consumption where they sell one dollar's worth for export.—Hamilton Spectator.

GREAT BRITAIN LEARNING.

We have said that there is already a serious danger; that the belief in protection under various fantastic guises is growing rapidly. We will go further and say that if the question of moderate protection were placed before the country to-morrow as the single issue of general election, unassociated with any confusing element, the result would show a Government pledged up to the hilt to reverse our fiscal system. This is a bold assertion, but it is not made carelessly.—London (Eng.) Shoe and Leather Record (Free Trade).

THE FARMER'S NEW WHEAT.

The substantial consequence of the great speculation is that the country has to carry over, at a heavy charge to its financial resources, about 50,000,000 bushels of wheat, much of which might have been marketed abroad had prices been allowed to find their natural level. Most of this surplus has been transferred from farmers to dealers in Chicago and other commercial cities, and so has to be carried by the resources of commercial centres. The effect will be seen in a less demand for the new wheat which farmers are about to offer.—N. Y. Tribune.

PRE-EMINNTELY POLITIC.

"The best possible tribute to the wisdom and efficiency of the present American tariff is the fact that Canada has adopted a system modeled very closely upon it and differing chiefly in the fact that it levies about two-thirds of our duties upon articles entering that country. The readjustment of rates has proceeded upon the theory that Canada has iron and coal in close proximity to each other and special facilities for the production of charcoal iron, and that the exclusion of foreign products would be more than compensated by the resulting growth of the Canadian iron and steel industry. The annual Canadian consumption of pig iron is 250,000 tons, not inclusive of steel rails. To make this quantity in Canada, 750,000 tons of iron ore, 120,000 tons of limestone, and 750,000 tons of coal would be required, and considering the benefit which would accrue to the country by the development of the iron industry, the Government felt that it was justified in losing the coal duty of half a million. The United States has little to lose by the new arrangement, and it certainly would be in bad grace to characterize the present policy otherwise than as pre-eminently politic on the part of our neighbor. May she reap great national and material results from the new system."—Cleveland (Ohio) Iron Trade Review.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

"Good by, John, dear John," said Bessie, kissing him again and again, and striving to keep back the tears that, do what she could, would gather in her blue eyes. "Good by, my love."

"God bless you, dearest," he said, simply, kissing her in answer; "good by, Mr. Croft, I hope to see you again in a week," and he was in the cart and had gathered up the long and intricate looking reins. Jantje let go the horses' heads and gave a whoop. Mouti, giving up star gazing, suddenly became an animated being and scrambled into the cart with surprising alacrity; the horses sprang forward at a hand gallop and were soon hidden from Bessie's dim sight in a cloud of dust. Poor Bessie! It was a hard trial; and now that John had gone and her tears could not distress him, she went into her room and gave way to them freely enough.

John reached Luck's, an establishment on the Pretoria road that happily combined the characteristics of an inn, a shop and a farm house, such as are to be met with in sparsely populated countries. It was not an inn and not a farm house, strictly speaking, nor was it altogether a shop, though there was a "store" attached. If the traveler were anxious to obtain accommodation for man and beast at a place of this stamp he had to proceed warily, so to speak, lest he should be requested to move on. He must advance, hat in hand, and ask to be taken in as a favor, as many a high handed traveler, accustomed to the obsequious attentions of "mine host," has learned to his cost. There is no such dreadful autocrat as your half and half inn keeper in South Africa, and then he is so completely master of the situation. "If you don't like it, go and be d—d to you," is his simple answer to the remonstrances of the infuriated voyager. And then you must either knock under and look as though you liked it, or trek on into the "unhostelled" wilderness. On this occasion, however, John fared well enough. To begin with he knew the owners of this place, who were very civil people if approached in a humble spirit, and, furthermore, he found everybody in such a state of unpleasurable excitement that they were only too glad to get another Englishman to talk the matters over with. Not that their information amounted to much, however. There was a rumor of the Bronker's Spruit disaster and other rumors of the investment of Pretoria, and of the advance of large bodies of Boers to take possession of the pass over the Drakensburg, known as Laing's Nek, but there was no definite intelligence.

"You won't get into Pretoria," said one melancholy man, "so it's no use trying. The Boers will just catch you and kill you, and there will be an end of it. You had better leave the girl to look after herself and go back to Moolfontein."

But this was not John's view of the matter. "Well," he said, "at any rate, I'll have a try." Indeed, he had a sort of bulldog sentiment about him that led him to believe that, if he made up his mind to do a thing, he would do it somehow, unless he should be physically incapacitated by circumstances beyond his own control. It is wonderful how far a mood of this sort will take a man. Indeed, it is the widespread possession of this sentiment that has made England what she is. Now it is beginning to die down and be legislated out of our national character, and the results are already commencing to appear in the incipient decay of our power. We cannot govern Ireland. It is beyond us; let Ireland have home rule! We cannot cope with our imperial responsibilities; let them be cast off; and so on. The Englishmen of fifty years ago did not talk like this. Well, every nation becomes emasculated sooner or later, that seems to be the universal fate; and it appears that it is our lot to be emasculated, not by the want of law, but by a plethora of it. This country was made, not by governments, but mostly in despite of them by the independent efforts of a series of individuals. The tendency nowadays is to merge the individual in the government, and to limit and even forcibly destroy personal enterprise and responsibility. Everything is to be legislated for or legislated against. The system is only in its bud as yet. When it blooms the empire will lose touch of its individual atoms and become a vast, soulless machine, which will first get out of order, then break down, and, last of all, break up. We owe more to sturdy, determined, unconvincible Englishmen like John Niel than we realize, or, perhaps, should be willing to acknowledge in these enlightened days.

CHAPTER XV.

A ROUGH JOURNEY.

The four grays were fresh horses, in good condition and with a light load behind them, so, notwithstanding the bad condition of the tracks which they call roads in South Africa, John made good progress.

By 11 o'clock that day he had reached Standerton, a little town upon the Vaal, not far from which he was destined, had he but known it, to meet with a sufficiently striking experience. Here he obtained confirmation of the Bronker's Spruit disaster, and listened with set face and blazing eyes to the tale of treachery and wholesale massacre which was, as he said, without a parallel in the annals of civilized war.

At Standerton John was again warned that it would be impossible for him to make his way through the Boers at Heidelberg, a town about sixty miles from Pretoria, where the Triumvirate, Kruger, Pretorius and Joubert, had proclaimed the republic. But he answered as before, that he must go on till he was stopped, and, inspanning his horses, set forward again, a little comforted by the news that the bishop of Pretoria, who was hurrying up to rejoin his family, had passed through a few hours before, also intent upon running the blockade, and that if he drove fast he might overtake him.

On he went, hour after hour, over the great deserted plain, but he did not succeed in catching up to the bishop. About forty miles from Standerton he saw a wagon standing by the roadside, and halted to see if he could get any information from its driver. But on investigation it became clear that the wagon had been looted of the provisions and goods with which it was loaded and the oxen driven off. Nor was this the only evidence of violence. Across the disselboom of the wagon, the hands still clasping a long bamboo whip, as though he had been trying to defend himself with it, lay the dead body of the native driver. His face, John noticed, was so composed and peaceful that, had it not been for the attitude and a neat little blue hole in the forehead, you might have thought he was asleep and not dead.

At sunset John outspanned his now flagging horses by the roadside, and gave them each a couple of bundles of forage from the store that he had brought with him. While they were eating it, leaving Mouti to keep an eye to them, he went some way off and sat down on a big ant heap to think. It was a wild and melancholy scene that stretched away before and behind him. Miles upon miles of plain, rolling east and west and north and south, like the billows of a frozen sea, only broken, far along the Heidelberg road, by some hills, known as Rooi Koppies. Nor was this all. Overhead was blazing and burning one of those remarkable sunsets which one sometimes sees in summer in Africa. The sky was full of lowering clouds, and the sullen orb of the setting sun had stained them perfectly blood red. Blood red they floated through the ominous sky, and blood red their shadows lay upon the grass. Even the air seemed red. It looked as though earth and heaven had been steeped in blood; and fresh as John was from the sight of the dead driver, his ears yet tingling with the tale of Bronker's Spruit, it is not to be wondered at that the suggestive sight oppressed him seated in that lonely waste, with no company except that melancholy "kakara-kakara" of an old black koran hidden away somewhere in the grass. He was not much given to that sort of thing, but he did begin to wonder whether this was the last journey of all the many he had made during the past twenty years, and if a Boer bullet was about to solve the mystery of life and death for him.

By the time that the horses had done their forage and Mouti had forced the bits into their reluctant mouths, the angry splendor of the sunset had faded, and the quiet night was falling over the glowing veldt like a pall on one scarce dead. There was, fortunately for the travelers, a bright half moon, and by its light John managed to direct the cart over many a weary mile. On he went for hour after hour, keeping his tired horses to the collar as best he could, till at last, about 11 o'clock, he saw the lights of Heidelberg before him, and knew that the question of whether or not his journey was at an end would speedily be decided for him. However, there was nothing for it but to go on and take his chance of slipping through. Presently he crossed a little stream, and made out the shape of a cart just ahead, around which men and a couple of lanterns were moving. No doubt, he thought to himself, it was the bishop, who had been stopped by the Boers. He was quite close to the cart when it moved on, and in another second he was greeted by the rough challenge of a sentry, and caught sight of the cold gleam of a rifle barrel.

"Wie da?" (Who's there?)

"Friend!" he answered, cheerfully, though feeling far from cheerful.

There was a pause, during which the sentry called to another man, who came up yawning, and saying something in Dutch. Straining his ears he caught the words, "Bishop's man," and this gave him an idea.

"Who are you, Englishman?" asked the second man, gruffly, holding up a lantern to look at John, and speaking in English.

"I am the bishop's chaplain, sir," he answered, mildly, trying desperately to look like an unoffending clergyman, "and I want to get on to Pretoria with him."

The man with the lantern inspected him closely. Fortunately he had on a dark coat and a clerical looking black felt hat; the same that Frank Muller had put a bullet through.

"He is a preacher fast enough," said the one man to the other. "Look, he is dressed like an old crow! What did 'Om' Kruger's pass say, Jan? Was it two carts or one that we were to let through? I think that it was one."

The other man scratched his head.

"I think it was two," he said. He did not like to confess to his comrade that he could not read. "No, I am sure that it was two."

"Perhaps we had better send up to Om Kruger and ask!" suggested the first man.

"Om Kruger will be in bed, and he puts up his quills like a porcupine if one wakes him," was the answer.

"Then let us keep the d—d preaching Englishman till to-morrow."

"Pray let me go on, gentlemen," said John, still in his mildest voice. "I am wanted to preach the word at Pretoria, and to watch by the wounded and dying."

"Yes, yes," said the first man, "there will soon be plenty of wounded and dying there. They will all be like the rooibaajes at Bonker's Spruit. Lord, what a sight that was! But they will get the bishop, so they won't want you. You can stop and look after our wounded, if the roobaatjes manage to hit any of us." And he beckoned to him to come out of the cart."

"Hullo!" said the other man, "here is a bag of mealies. We will commandeer that anyhow." And he took his knife and cut the line with which the sack was fastened to the back of the cart, so that it fell to the ground. "That will feed our horses for a week," he said, with a chuckle, in which the other man joined. It was pleasant to become so easily possessed of an unearned increment in the shape of a bag of mealies.

"Well, are we to let the old crow go?" said the first man.

"If we don't let him go we shall have to take him up to headquarters, and I want to go to sleep." And he yawned.

"Well, let him go," answered the other. "I think you are right. The pass said two carts. Be off, you d—d preaching Englishman!"

John did not wait for any more, but laid the whip across the horses' backs with a will.

On the following morning, when Commandant Frank Muller—having heard that this enemy, John Niel, was on his way up with the Cape cart and four gray horses—ascertained that a vehicle answering to that description had been allowed to pass through Heidelberg in the dead of night, his state of mind may better be imagined than described.

As for the two sentries, he had them tried by court martial and set them to make fortifications for the rest of the rebellion. They can neither of them now hear the name of a clergyman, mentioned without breaking out into a perfect flood of blasphemy.

To be Continued.

NOT SO UNPATRIOTIC.

Considered by itself, Mr. Macdonald's resolution will go for nothing; but when regarded in the light of the circumstances that gave it birth, it goes for a great deal. It is an answer to the proposal to form with the United States on arrangements which should discriminate against Great Britain. The second resolution which rejects commercial union for political reasons, follows not unnaturally from the first.—Monetary Times.

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious things that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

There will be a discussion on commercial union and inter-imperial trade. Those wishing to become members are invited to be present. 2d149

Personal.

Mr. Wm. Lovering, of the firm of H. L. Lovering & Co., Coldwater, is in town looking at the new roller process in Meldrum, Davidson & Co's mill, which is very satisfactory to him. When Mr. Lovering returns to Coldwater he is going to shut down his mill and commence at once to fit it up with the latest style of machinery. The Wm. Hamilton Co. will start to build this mill shortly.

Cobourg Railway.

At the Council meeting on Monday evening the Mayor, in relating the result of the Towns's petition to the Government regarding the Cobourg railway, stated that Mr. Bell, who had charge of the matter in the interests of the Grand Trunk, told him that the Grand Trunk had purchased that part of the line from Peterborough to Chemong Lake and that it was the intention of the Company to run it. It is to be hoped that the Grand Trunk will open it up. Abundant traffic would doubtless be had for one train a day at least.

The Cost.

The auditors' report presented to the Town Council on Monday night furnishes details of interest. In 1886 the net receipts were a little over $71,000. The amount of fines imposed in the Police Court during 1886 was $6,392.96, of which $5,030.28 was collected. The Collegiate Institute cost the town $3,780.00, the Public Schools $7,859 00, and the Separate Schools $2,700.00. The amount set opposite the streets and bridges account is $9,395.35. Printing cost the modest sum of $337.81; the Nicholls Hospital $3,000.00; charities, $1,589 27; electric light, $999.75; gas, $1,962.35; fire department, $2,532 16; expenses of governing the town, $1,560.83, and hydrants, $1,860.77.

A CHOICE selection of heavy double and twisted Cottonades, just the thing for harvesting, now in stock at TURNBULL'S.

Lost His Horse.

The Kingston Whig says:—"Capt. Sanderson, Durham Field Battery, sustained a loss on Saturday after the rain shower. His horse, which was kicked by another horse shortly after arriving in camp, and had one of its legs fractured, slipped and fell into a hole. When picked up it was found that the limb had been fractured in a fresh place. It had, therefore to be shot, and the Government will be asked to compensate the owner for its loss." The Kingston News says:—"A board of officers composed of Lieut.-Col. Rogers, 3rd cavalry, president; Col. Cotton and Veterinary Surgeon Massie, will examine into the cause of injuries received by the horse belonging to Capt. Sanderson.

NON-PAYMENT STATUTE LABOR TAX.

TUESDAY, June 28.—Mr. Jos. Bennett, Pathmaster of North Monaghan, had Wm. Wilkinson before P. M. Dumble this morning for non-performance or non-payment of his statute labor dues. Wilkinson was fined $5 and costs.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Music in the Schools—Conventions—Literature—Officers Appointed.

After the opening of the morning (Friday) session of the Teachers' Institute in the Court House, the President read a circular from the Minister of Education relating to the teaching of music in the public schools, and to the formation of classes, during the holidays, at Toronto, to qualify teachers to teach the subject.

Messrs. Hutchison, Sykes, Stewart, Stone, Mark and Brown and Misses Moreland and Cummings were appointed a committee to make arrangements to hold conventions in their several townships.

Messrs. Whittington, Sykes and Rennie and Misses Duff and Wright were appointed a committee to appoint officers.

The discussion on the College of Preceptors was postponed till the meeting of the township conventions in the fall.

Dr. McLellan then took up the subject of literature in the schools and dealt with the question in a very masterly style. He said that literature properly taught cultivated, in the best possible manner, the highest faculties of the mind, both mental and moral. One of the great purposes of the teaching of literature was to cultivate in the pupils a taste for good literature. Any teaching that did not accomplish this object was not good teaching. The subject, he said, should be commenced in the very lowest classes by the memorizing of poetical gems, of which the English language was full. The lecture cannot fail to be a great assistance to teachers in showing the very best way to teach the subject in order to get the best results.

Miss Beckett followed with a class of small children and showed her method of teaching drawing. It is quite evident from her manner of dealing with the subject that it can be made both interesting and profitable to all the classes of the school.

This closed the morning session.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee on appointment of officers reported as follows, the report being unanimously adopted:—

PRESIDENT—Mr. Bean, of the Collegiate Institute.

VICE-PRESIDENT—Mr. Hutchison, of Norwood.

SEC.-TREAS.—Mr. Rooney, of Ashburnham.

COMMITTEE—Messrs. McIlmoyl, Rennie and Stirling and Misses McDonald, Munro and Beckett.

Dr. McLellan took up "The Beginning of Knowledge," making the subject a very interesting one.

Votes of thanks were tendered the President, Secretary and Dr. McLellan, after which the convention was brought to a close.

A Jubilee Bell.

We find in the Winnipeg Free Press interesting particulars of the dedication of Holy Trinity College Church of a new bell provided for it by the efforts of Mrs. H. H. Smith, who with her husband has left so many friends in Peterborough. It its report of the service on Sunday, June 19th, the Free Press says:—"The Rev. O. Fortin, rector, preached an appropriate sermon from I. Sam. II. 39, 'Thus saith the Lord: Them that honor me, I will honor.' In the course of an able sermon, which was closely followed throughout, he referred in the following terms to the efforts of Mrs. H. H. Smith in securing a bell for the church: 'As for ourselves, we shall have good reason to remember this year of jubilee. For in future, we shall be called to Divine service by the solemn notes of a magnificent bell, which will ring for the first time on Tuesday evening, when we shall have in this church a general jubilee service. This bell has been procured first of all by the kind and well-sustained efforts of a lady, whose devotion and self-sacrifice in this matter will ever be held in grateful remembrance. She originated the idea. She felt that a bell for our church would be a fitting monument of our appreciation of the mercies of God in this year of jubilee. But, in the second place, we owe this valuable addition to our church appointments to the readiness with which you have all responded to the appeal for assistance. I am satisfied that whenever we hear the tones of our bell a sense of satisfaction will pervade our hearts that we contributed towards it, and that the friends of the church have not been taxed for it in any way whatever." On Jubilee Day, June 21st, there was a magnificent choral service at Holy Trinity and in its report the Free Press says:—"Before the jubilee service commenced the interesting ceremony of dedicating the new bell to the church was performed. This had been arranged to take place at half-past seven, and as is customary, was performed beneath the belfry. It commenced with the impressive dedicatory prayer, which was followed by that beautiful hymn: 'When Morning Gilds the Sky.' Then Mrs. H. H. Smith rang the bell for the first time, and as the mellow tones died away, the ceremony of dedication to the service of the church was finished."

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Sugar.

A friend sends us a Scottish grocer's price list) by which it appears that at Peebles American-made granulated sugar is selling at two pence per pound. Canadian made granulated sells at the refinery at 6¾ cents.—Toronto Globe.

Of course our contemporary desired to state the facts fully and fairly. It is matter for regret that the design failed to some extent of realization. The writer for the Globe forgot to say that the United States pays a bounty on exported sugar considerably in excess of the duty paid on the raw sugar when imported. Canadian sugar for refining pays a heavy duty to the Government. If that duty were remitted sugar would be cheaper, but the people would be compelled to pay taxes in some other shape. It may be remarked that the Mackenzie Government exacted and received higher duties on sugar than have since been collected. In 1878 the imports of sugar of all grades aggregated 105,240,173 pounds, on which duty was paid to the amount of $2,515,823.85, or say two and four-tenths cents per pound. In 1886, 178,874,257 pounds of sugar were imported, on which $2,353,646.09 of duty was paid, or less than one and four-tenths of a cent per pound. The duty was more than a cent a pound higher in 1878 than in 1886, and yet the Reformers complain of the high price of sugar. Yet sugar is now about one-half the price charged in 1878.—Hamilton Spectator.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things when ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

POLICE COURT.

FORSTALLING.

WEDNESDAY, June 29.—Chief Adams charged Robt. H. Green with having purchased potatoes on the market before 11 o'clock a. m., contrary to the town bylaw in that behalf. The defendant said he had contracted for the potatoes, but did not know it was against the law.

A fine of five dollars and costs was imposed.

Dominion Day.

At a meeting of the Jubilee Celebration Committee, held on Tuesday evening, it was decided to carry out that part of the jubilee celebration programme which was not carried out on June 21st. There will, however, be some slight changes in the order of the day. The children will meet at 9 a. m. at the drill shed and march to the Horticultural Gardens, where the choral singing will take place, led by Messrs. Gallelly and A. Freeman, the latter taking the place of Mr. Millar, who, with the Fire Brigade Band go to Grimsby on that day. Immediately after the singing the sports in the Riverside Park will take place. No admission fee will be charged and nothing will be charged competitors to enter. In the afternoon the regatta will be held on the Little Lake, under the auspices of the Otonabee Canoe Club. The club are making arrangements for the regatta and promise the public a good exhibition of the oarsman's skill. At the meeting of the Jubilee Celebration Committee votes of thanks were passed to the Peterborough and Ashburnham Councils, Mayor Stevenson, Mr. T. G. Hazlitt, H. Grundy, the merchants, the societies, the Fire Brigade Band, the firemen and the citizens generally for the parts they took in contributing to the success of the celebration on June 21st.

The Weather.

The weather clerk has had it in for the people to-day. When the pedestrians languidly neared town returning from the cemetery on Decoration Day it was 82 in the shade, this at half past five o'clock. But to-day it's worse. The hardware stores and tombstone factories have a monopoly of the cool weather. All the breeze that blows to-day is capable of being captured in a skull cap. This morning at 8 o'clock the thermometer stood at 123 degrees in the sun, and this afternoon it is 92 in the shade. The Sons of England say that Sturgeon Point is the place for iceberg weather.

Who is He?

Rumor says that he is a carpenter and that just now he is working over in Ashburnham. She is a poor unfortunate creature who is an orphan and only half witted. When the boys find him out every one of them will invest in a whip.

Alterations.

The building recently occupied by Messrs. Hall, Jones & Co. is now in the hands of the contractors. The proposed alterations will be completed in time for the resumption of occupancy in the fall.

The Children.

The children are requested to meet at the Court House to-morrow evening for practice for the Dominion Day celebration.

Finishing Touches.

Mr. J. Watson is putting on a few finishing touches in the decoration of the engine room at the fire station.

Bicycle.

The Bicycle Club will meet on the market square this evening at 7.30 o'clock for a run.

NOT PAUPERS, BUT PENNILESS.

A Canadian Protest Against Undesirable Emigrants From England.

TORONTO, June 28.—The Hon. Mr. Carling has written a long letter in reply to Mayor Howland's protest against the English custom of landing pauper immigrants on our shores. He points out that unfortunates from the east end of London were not paupers but simply penniless. Their chief fault was lack of adaptability to Canadian activities, and he cabled home a protest against shipping such immigrants to Canada. He is sure that the Immigration Act clothes the Government with power to return unsuitable immigrants to Britain at the expense of the steamship company responsible for their presence here.

KING KALAKAUA'S PERIL.

The King Must Go—He Receives Bribes and Deceives the People.

A letter received in San Francisco from a Honolulu missionary says:—"If we have not war, we have rumors of war without end. King Kalakaua submits quietly to charges made in sworn affidavits that he received $75,000 from one Chinese syndicate for an opium license and then broke with the bribers and gave a license to another syndicate who paid him $80,000, $30,000 only of which went into the treasury.

"These facts are unquestioned, no one, not even the king himself, having the hardihood to deny them. We may be wrong, but we think a thief and the man who stands with open hands inviting bribes is unworthy to rule. We are very certain that the old motto, 'The King can do no wrong,' is worn out. We paraphrase the Pacific Coast motto, 'the Chinese must go,' to 'the King must go,' and he will go, and that speedily. This sentiment is general on the Islands."

Considerable shipments of arms have been made from San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands.

THE ALASKA FISHERY.

A Senator on the Trouble—Presidential Prospects—George and McGlynn.

VICTORIA, B. C., June 28.—Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, arrived on Saturday. He goes to Alaska on the Olympian to-night. In an interview he stated that it was a mistaken idea that the American Government would close Behring Sea to foreign vessels, in fact he did not see how they could legally accomplish it. The whole trouble was engendered by the Alaska Commercial Company, and President Cleveland was aware of this fact. A commission would be appointed to enquire into the fisheries question. Mr. Voorhees thought the question would from an issue next presidential compaign, and Mr. Blaine's action in the eastern fisheries dispute might cost him his nomination. Without doubt Mr. Blain would be a presidential candidate next election, and though he might be nominated, he thought Mr. Cleveland, if nominated, would have an easy election. The only thing that would lose the election for Mr. Cleveland was the formation of the third party, and Mr. Voorhees was alarmed at the strength of Mr. Henry George, in New York, and also Dr. McGlynn, who controlled the Catholic vote; but there was a probability at the last moment of them throwing all this strength with the Democratic party.

THE ANGLO-TURKISH CONVENTION.

Russia Making a Cat's-Paw of France—Lord Salisbury Now Indifferent.

LONDON, June 28.—The temporizing attitude of Turkey in the matter of signing the Anglo-Turkish treaty, in the negotiation of which the Sultan's representatives displayed so much ardor and enthusiasm, is the uppermost topic of discussion in political circles and among the general public as well. The belief is now gaining ground, receiving confirmatory impetus from constant accessions of information, official or otherwise, but true, that France is acting in the affair simply as a cat's-paw for Russia. Really France's interests in Egypt are greater than those of Russia, but Russia's interests in Bulgaria and India are more vital than those of France, and from France's association with her in protesting against England's implied control over the land of the Pharaoh's Russia expects to secure a formidable ally in the prosecution of her Asiatic schemes and Balkan intrigues. Thus the combined opposition of these two powers to the Eyptian treaty may be regarded not so much as a protest against the status of Egypt, which the treaty provides for, as the initiation of a policy of coercion on the part of Russia against England in India. That the view of the situation has forced itself upon the Government is now quite obvious from the fact that Lord Salisbury held a prolonged conference with Sir Evelyn Baring, the English diplomatic agent in Egypt, yesterday, resulting in eliciting the Premier's expression of opinion almost identical with the foregoing. Lord Salisbury doubts the sincerity of France, but is convinced of the futility of her adopting any course other than the one she has taken. It is apparent that Lord Salisbury sees nothing to be gained by insisting upon the ratification of the treaty and would rather than not, as matters have shaped themselves, see Sir Henry Drummond Wolff's mission turn out a failure. The Egyptian matter can wait, but the question of Russia's supremacy on the Afghan frontier will admit of no delay, neither can England afford to place herself in a position offering to Russia the slightest pretext for aggression or retaliation, nor can she allow the Sultan to get into trouble which England would have to help him out of.

THE COBURG SUCCESSION.

Prince Bismark Said to Favor the Prince of Saxe-Meiningen.

LONDON, June 28.—The question of succession to the Grand Ducal throne of Coburg is one of personal interest to the English Royal family. The Duke of Edinburgh was long looked upon as the heir and successor to his uncle, the reigning Grand Duke; and latterly his son, Prince Alfred, has been spoken of as being destined to replace his father. Now it appears that the Berlin Cabinet, acting under the personal influence of Prince Bismarck, has placed a new candidate in the first rank. This is the Hereditary Prince of Saxe-Meiningen, the husband of the Crown Prince's eldest daughter. If this Prince were to become jointly sovereign of both Saxonies, viz., of that of Meiningen and of that of Coburg-Gotha, a further step would be taken towards the abolition of separate States and towards the unification of Germany.

THE CRIMES BILL.

A Motion of Urgency—Pressing on the Measure.

LONDON, June 28.—In the House of Commons to night Mr. Healy moved as an amendment to the Crimes Bill that prisoners be given the same right to challenge jurors as was granted the Government; that the Government be not allowed to challenge jurors on account of their religion; and that in the trials of foreigners, one-half the jury must understand the language of the accused. The motion was rejected. Upon a motion to adjurn the debate Mr. W. H. Smith arose and said that after the discussion of this and the proceeding evening, the House would be prepared for the notice he was about to give. (Cries of "Cloture," and cheers.) He would on Thursday move that at seven o'clock on Monday evening, the remaining resolutions on the report stage be put seriatim without debate.

HASTINGS.

THE BRIDGE.—Mr. Chas. Wynn, bridge builder of Peterborough, being commissioned by the County Council to inspect and report on the stability of the bridge, commenced the examination on Monday last. From the evidence of roots and timbers bare, it would appear that it is extremely dangerous to trust much weight on the old structure, and we would caution our readers to drive very gently while passing over it.

NEARLY GONE.—Our old bridge had a narrow escape from destruction by fire last Saturday evening. Fortunately or unfortunately, the flames were seen and a few pails of water merely saved what will probably cost the counties several hundred dollars to get rid of one of those days. It may perhaps be just as well, as the job will give work to some persons, and a danger to the woollen factory be averted.—Star.

NO DANGER OF WAR.

LONDON, June 28.—In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Ferguson, Under Foreign Secretary, replying to Messrs. Cameron and Coneybeare, said the Government did not know the terms of the French note to the Sultan with reference to the Egyptian Convention. England had had no communication with France on the subject, and there was no ground for assuming that the Convention would entangle England in war.

THE PAPAL MISSION.

ROME, June 28.—It is stated that the Pope was induced to send a Papal mission to Ireland by the insistence on the part of the English bishops, clergymen and laymen, that the reports of the Irish bishops on the condition of Ireland were exaggerated. Wishing to get at the exact truth, the Pope decided to send unbiased agents of his own to make an investiaation. Mgr. Persico and Mgr. Giraldi, who were chosen to make the enquiry, were recalled while on their way to the railway station on Friday last, but left this evening for Dublin.

An Indian's Revenge.

VICTORIA, B. C., June 28.—Information has been received here that the sloop "Seabird," which left Port Townsend for Alaska in May, 1886, never reached port, but the crew were murdered by Indians in Knight's Inlet. The crew consisted of Captain Wells, Henry Moore, pilot; Henry Bolt and a German, name unknown. Moore has a family in Victoria. Bolt's family live in Seattle. Tom, an Indian whose brother was hanged in Nanaimo last year, is supposed to have committed the deed in revenge.

South Sea Civil War.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—A letter received from the Mexican Minister at Honolulo by Gen. Salomon yesterday, says the outlook on the Sandwich Islands is very serious and that reports of bloodshed may be expected by the next steamer. He says a revolution is in progress and the overthrow of Kalakaua is a certainty.

Blaine Slighted.

CHICAGO, June 28.—A special from London to the News says that the Echo will to-day attack Minister Phelps for not properly introducing Mr. Blaine to the British Ministry. The Echo will accuse the Minister of indulging in party feeling in the matter.

The U. S. Navy.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The North Atlantic squadron, under the command of Rear Admiral Luce, had target practice yesterday at Newport, R. I., after which the Ossipee, commander Bainbridge Huff, sailed direct for the Canadian fishing banks.

Dr. McGlynn a Knight.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn intends to become a Knight of Labor and to work hereafter in the interest of that organization, a part of his time at least, with a view of disseminating his land theories.

A Death Embrace.

VICTORIA, B.C., June 28.—Two boys, named Fred. Maltby and Thomas Deacon, were drowned in Pike Lake on Thursday. They were found on Saturday locked in one another's embrace.

PARNELL'S POWER.

LONDON, June 28.—Mr. Parnell's decision that Mr. Gill must give way to Mr. Sexton in the contest for the nomination for a candidate to succeed Mr. T. D. Sullivan, M.P., as Lord Mayor of Dublin for the ensuing year, is in flat contradiction of the rumors that the Irish leader's power had waned, and that he had or would shortly resign his place at the head of the National party, and the prompt and graceful acquiescence of Mr. Gill in the request of his chief adds strength to their refutation. Mr. Parnell has not only not resigned, but he has no intention of doing so.

NOVA SCOTIA'S BISHOPRIC.

LONDON, June 28.—Canon Hole, of Nottingham, has been asked to accept the Bishopric of Nova Scotia.

THEY CAN NOW UNITE.

LONDON, June 28.—Sir George Otto Trevelyan, in a letter, published to-day, says that the Gladstonians have conceded the disputed point in the Irish programme, and that therefore, there is no obstacle to a reunion of the Liberal party.

M. PASTEUR'S SYSTEM.

LONDON, June 28.—The Royal Commission appointed to investigate the system of M. Pasteur, has submitted a report which is generally favorable to the adoption of M. Pasteur's methods.

A CRITICISM.

LONDON, June 28.—The Standard strongly censures the Government for courting a diplomatic defeat at Constantinople by extending the time of the Sultan for the ratification of the Egyptian convention, which it says is doomed to failure. The Government ought promptly to have washed its hands of the whole affair instead of dallying with it.

AN ALLEGED OFFER.

PARIS, June 28.—The Temps says England has offered Germany the protectorate of Syria in return for Germany's support of England in the Egyptian question.

MOSLEM FEELING.

LONDON, June 28.—The Standard's Paris correspondent declares that the Sultan of Turkey will ratify the Egyptian convention after a slight modification has been made in the phraseology, but not in the substance, in order not to offend Moslem feeling.

RAILWAY CASUALTY.

BERLIN, June 28.—An express train going from Berlin to Cologne was thrown from the track at Muelheim to-day, and seventeen persons were more or less injured.

THE POPE AND ITALY.

ROME, June 28.—The Italie states that the Pope has asked Mgr. Rapolla to prepare a circular instructing nuncios abroad concerning his attitude on the conciliation question. In it he will declare that he will not renounce his right to temporal power in Rome.

AFRAID OF FOREIGNERS.

BERLIN, June 28.—The Kreuz-Zeitung says Austria and Russia will issue no invitations to foreign officers to witness the army manœuvres.

MR PARNELL.

LONDON, June 28.—Mr. Justin McCarthy writes that there is not the slightest truth in any report about Mr. Parnell retiring from political life. The Nationalists hav never talked or ever thought of electing another leader and all hope soon to see Mr. Parnell restored to perfect health.

JUBILEE MEDALS.

LONDON, June 28.—The Queen in commemoration of her jubilee, gave gold medals to her royal visitors and silver medals to their attendants.

THE KNIGHTS ATTACKED.

BERLIN, June 28.—The Bremen police authorities have prohibited Herr Liebknecht's lecture on the Knights of Labor.

ALSATIAN TROUBLES.

BERLIN, June 28.—A large glass making firm at Vallerysthal, in Alsace, has withdrawn its offer of a subvention for a projected railway between Vallerysthal and Saarburg, in consequence of the expulsion of three of the firm's directors, who were officers in the French territorial army.

BANISHED WITH HONOUR.

PARIS, June 28.—General Boulanger has been appointed commander of the thirteenth army corps. Gen. Boulanger's corps is stationed at Clermont, Ferrand, 250 miles from Paris. The Cabinet, it is said, decided upon this disposition of Gen. Boulanger's case in order to ensure his absence from Paris during the July fetes.

SEIZURE OF A YACHT.

DUBLIN, June 28.—Mr. Wm. M. Murphy, Nationalist member of Parliament, has commenced proceedings against the captain of H. M. S. Shannon for seizing his yacht in Bantry bay last week because she carried a green flag.

AN AGHAN VICTORY.

LONDON, June 28.—In the House of Lords to-day Viscount Cross, Secretary of State for India, replying to Lord Rosebery, said that the Viceroy of India telegraphed under date of June 26th, that a serious engagement took place on the 13th inst., between the Ghilzais and the Ameer's taoops, and that the Viceroy's agent at Candahar reported that the Ameer's troops gained a decisive victory.

TORPEDO BOATS.

BERLIN, June 28.—The Vossische Zeitung says the Porte has ordered the Germania Company, of Kiel, to despatch to Turkey a vessel with two torpedo catchers, also nine torpedo boats. The vessels are required to be powerful and speedy.

ANXIOUS TO ADJOURN.

LONDON, June 28.—The News says it believes that the Government contemplates the abandonment of the promised bill providing for trial by a commission of judges and that the Government may ask an autumn sitting for financial business only. As many members desire the earliest possible adjournment for the present session for the holidays, it is probable that the Land Bill will only pass the first reading prior to the third reading of the Crimes Bill.

FIGHT IN ALGIERS.

PARIS, June 28.—One hundred Moors, bearing firearms, attacked the Spahi patrol at Beskati in Algiers, killing and wounding several. Many Moors were also killed and wounded. The military interfered and stopped the fighting. Thirty of the Moors were arrested. Quiet has been restored.

The Daily Review

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1887.

EMPTY PROMISES.

THREE gentlemen, one a telegraph man, one a lawyer, and the other a publisher, are endeavoring to cultivate the farmers' vote by means which cannot be admired. They profess an overpowering admiration for the Canadian farmer, while they are at the same time insulting him by assuming that he can be deluded by the most daring misrepresentations. It is not a good cause which requires to be supported by falsehood. And these political farmers of votes, with their assistants in the press and on the platform, show an utter disregard for the truth. They variously state the farmers as being three-fourths or seven-eights of the population of the Dominion, and argue that being in so large a majority, they alone should be considered. Now the agricultural industry is undoubtedly the most important in Canada, but the agricultural population does not amount to one-half of the the whole population, and such an exaggeration is not honest. Again, they speak of the farmers as if they were the only producers in the country, the sole foundation for its prosperity. As we have said, agriculture is the most important industry in Canada, not only on account of its magnitude, but also in regard to the indispensable usefulness of its products. But in this climate at least clothing and habitations are as necessary to life as food, and therefore the operative and the artisan cannot fairly be represented as mere useless drones, preying upon the agricultural community. The farmers of Canada stand far above any necessity for having their great claims upon the country exaggerated, and they may well be suspicious of those who attempt to creep into their good graces by dishonest sycophancy.

In the inducements held out for an amalgamation with the United States by these deluders the Canadian farmer will find that he has good grounds for such suspicion. The facts when inconvenient are boldly falsified. The farmer is told that he would get several cents a pound more for his cheese under reciprocity, though as we have shown, cheese is selling here a little better if anything than on the other side of the St Lawrence. Again they are told that they would get ten cents more for their wool, though the trifling advantage in the United States would hardly suffice to pay for carriage. On cattle again it is pretended that they would gain largely, the important facts being concealed that in the United States they have also surplus stock to sell abroad, and that commercial union with them would be sure to deprive our farmers of the privilege of sending their healthy cattle alive to Great Britain. These political farmers also take care always to speak generally of the farmers' crops as coming within the promised benefit, insinuating, though they dare not state it plainly, that the main crop, wheat, comes within the category, for it is too well known that the United States has a larger surplus of it to export than we have, and that prices in Canada compare favorably with those across the boundary.

The truth is that with the single exception of barley, not an article produced by our farmers can be named as to which they would obtain even a temporary advantage by the change. On the other hand they would lose their present market in the Lower Provinces, which import breadstuffs, and the local market for the operatives whose factories would be closed. Meanwhile our farmers would have to compete with importations from the United States. They can remember how, formerly, the lumbermen of this district imported their pork from the other side. Would they prefer to see that practice renewed, instead of having here in their midst a flourishing pork packing establishment ready to buy all the fat hogs they can bring to it? A little reflection and comparison of prices will save the farmer from being deluded by vague promises and empty rhetoric.

Most dishonest of all is the pretence that the old profits under the previous reciprocity treaty would be restored. The high prices and eager demand then existing were caused by great wars, which are not being waged now.

THE CUSTOMS LINE RETAINED.

WE took occasion lately to remark that while the Globe wanted the importation of butter prohibited because of the small quantity of oleomargarine that might be smuggled through, it, at the same time, wanted "butter, soap grease, oleomargarine and everything else admitted from the United States free from all restrictions."

In reply to this the Globe, after a little characteristic billingsgate, says:—

"It does not follow that, under Commercial Union, oleomargarine would be admitted free of duty. Under any reciprocity treaty, however liberal, there would be an absolute prohibition of the importation of certain articles. For instance, neither Canada nor the United States would permit the importation of counterfeit money, or indecent or blasphemous or treasonable books or prints. For the same reason that the importation of these articles is prohibited, the importation of oleomargarine would not be permitted. And if the objection be raised that Custom-house officers cannot tell oleomargarine from butter, the answer is that detectives would have to be employed to trace back the suspected importations to their place of manufacture—which is precisely what is necessary to be done now, and what the Globe is trying to stir up Mr. Bowell to accomplish."

Well, we thought that the Globe and other advocates of Commercial Union alleged, as one inducement for Canada to become tributary to the United States, that the customs line between the two countries would be swept away. But now it appears that we would not be saved this expense, as the custom-house officials would be retained to prevent the entrance of oleomargarine and bad money, literature and art. Not only so, but we are to have the further expense of a new staff of detectives to trace back the imitation butter to the factory, and, we suppose, to bring to punishment the importers guilty of the fraud, though the Globe has so far complained whenever importers have been detected and punished for attempts to defraud the country.

Thus the plea of economy is "swept away," and so it would be with the other pretended advantages promised by the Globe and the band of commercial annexationists.

As to the insulting reference by the Globe to Mr. Carnegie as the supposed writer of the words to which the Globe objects, it is a piece of low impertinence founded on a wilful falsehood, besides being a breach of journalistic etiquette worthy of a second-class village paper—or of the Globe.

Mr. J. Rider Haggard attains to the rank of a single-volume-fiction success by the fact that the London trade has subscribed for 10,000 of his new "Allan Quartermain," which will be out next week. This is the largest order for a six-shilling book ever given.

The visit of King Milan to Vienna is said to be of the nature of a flight, and it is doubtful if he will ever return to Servia unless under the escort of Austrian bayonets. His wife, Queen Natalie, who is going to St. Petersburg, is said to be plotting against him.

In an interview on the alien labour question, Mr. Bowell stated that he had no official information on the subject, but that a special officer of his department had been detailed to visit points on the Canadian frontier and procure information, and that on his report being received the Government would take prompt action and make official representations to Washington.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

According to a statement by Mr. Baden-Powell the area of the British empire has increased during Victoria's reign from 1,100,000 to 8,400,000 square miles; the European population from 2,100,000 to 10,000,000, and the coloured from 98,100,000 to 262,000,000; the state revenues from £24,000,000 to £122,000,000; the external trade from £108,000,000 to £730,000,000; and the shipping from 8,700,000 tons to 62,000,000 tons.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

Luckily for John, although he had been delayed for five minutes or more, he managed to overtake the cart in which he presumed the bishop was esconced. His lordship had been providentially delayed by the breaking of a trace; otherwise, it is clear that his self nominated chaplain would never have got through the steep streets of Heidelberg that night. The whole town was choked up with Boer wagons, full now of sleeping Boers. Over one batch of wagons and tents John made out the Transvaal flag fluttering in the night breeze, and emblazoned with the appropriate emblem of an ox wagon and an armed Boer, marking, no doubt, the headquarters of the triumvirate. Once the cart ahead of him was stopped by a sentry and some conversation ensued. Then it went on again; and so did John, unmolested. It was weary work, that journey through Heidelberg, and full of terrors for John, who every moment expected to be stopped and dragged off ignominiously to jail. The horses, too, were dead beat, and made frantic attempts to turn and stop at every house. But, somehow, they got through the little place and then were stopped once more. Again the first cart got on ahead, but this time John was not so lucky.

"The pass said one cart," said a voice.

"Yah, yah, one cart," answered another.

John again put on his clerical air and told his artless tale; but neither of the men could understand English, so they went to a wagon that was standing about fifty yards away to fetch somebody who could.

"Now, inkoos," whispered the Zulu Mouti, "drive on! drive on!"

John took the hint and lashed the horses with his long whip; while Mouti, bending forward over the splashboard, thrashed the wheelers with a sjambock. Off went the team in a spasmodic gallop and had covered a hundred yards of ground before the two sentries had realized what had happened. Then they began to run after the cart shouting, but were soon lost in the darkness.

John and Mouti did not spare the whip, but pressed on up the stony hills on the Pretoria side of Heidelberg without a halt.

By 11 o'clock they reached a hotel, or wayside house, known as Ferguson's, and situated about twenty miles from Pretoria. It was empty, except for a couple of cats and a stray dog. The inhabitants had evidently fled from the Boers. Here John stabled and fed his horses, giving them all that remained of the forage, and then, once more, started on for the pass stage. The road was dreadful; and he knew that the country must be full of hostile Boers, but fortunately he met none. It took him four hours to get over the twenty miles of ground; but it was not until he got to the "Poort," or neck running down into Pretoria, that he saw a vestige of a Boer. Then he made out two mounted men riding along the top of a precipitous stone strewn ridge, some 600 yards or so from him. At first he thought that they were going to descend it, but presently they changed their minds and got off their horses.

While he was still wondering what this might portend, he saw a puff of white smoke float up from where the men were, and then another. Then came the sharp, unmistakable "ping" of a bullet passing, as far as he could judge, within three feet of his head, followed by a second "ping," and a cloud of dust beneath the belly of the first horse. The two Boers were firing at him.

He did not wait for any more target practice, but, thrashing the horses to a canter, got the cart round a projecting bank before they could load and fire again. After that he saw no more of them.

At last he reached the mouth of the Poort and saw the prettiest of the South African towns, with its red and white houses, its tall clumps of trees and pink lines of blooming rose hedges lying on the plain before him, all set in the green veldt, and made beautiful by the golden light of the afternoon, and he thanked God for the sight. He knew that he was safe now, and let his tired horses walk slowly down the hillside and across the bit of plain beyond. To his left were the jail and barrack sheds, and gathered about them were hundreds of wagons and tents, toward which he drove. Evidently the town was deserted and its inhabitants in danger. When he got within half a mile or so a picket of mounted men came riding toward him, followed by a miscellaneous crowd on horseback and on foot.

"Who goes there?" shouted a voice in honest English.

"A friend who is uncommonly glad to see you," he answered, with that feeble jocosity we are all apt to indulge in when a great weight is at length lifted from our nerves.

CHAPTER XVI

PRETORIA.

Jess did not have a very happy time of it at Pretoria previous to the outbreak of hostilities. Most people who have made a great moral effort, and after a severe mental struggle entered on the drear path of self sacrifice, have experienced the reaction that will follow as certainly as the night follows the day. It is one thing to renounce the light, to stand in the full glow of the setting beams of our imperial joy and chant out our farewell, and quite another to live alone in the darkness. For a little while memory may support us, but memory grows faint. On every side is the thick, cheerless pall and the stillness through which no sound comes. We are alone, quite alone, cut off from the fellowship of the day, unseeing and unseen. More especially is this so when our dungeon is of our own making, and we ourselves have shot its bolts. There is a natural night that comes to all, and in its unwavering course swallows every hope and fear, forever and forever. To this we can more easily resign ourselves, for we recognise the universal lot and bow ourselves beneath the all effacing hand. The earth does not pine when the daylight passes from its peaks; it only sleeps.

But Jess had buried herself, and she knew it. There was no absolute need for her to have resigned her affection to her sister; she had done so of her own will, and at times she naturally enough regretted it. Self denial is a stern faced angel. If only we hold him fast and wrestle with him long enough he will speak us soft words of happy sound, just as, if we wait long enough in the darkness of the night, stars will come to share our loneliness. Still this is one of those things that time hides from us and only reveals at his own pleasure; and so far as Jess was concerned, his pleasure was not yet. Outwardly, however, she showed no sign of her distress and of the passion which was eating at her heart. She was pale and silent, it is true, but then she had always been remarkable for her pallor and silence. Only she gave up her singing.

And so the weeks went on, drearily enough for the poor girl, who was doing what other people did—eating and drinking, riding and going to parties like the rest of the Pretoria world, till at last she began to think that she had better be going home again, lest she should wear out her welcome. And yet she dreaded to do so, mindful of her daily prayer to be delivered from temptation. As to what was going on at Moolfontein she was in almost complete ignorance. Bessie wrote to her, of course, and so did her uncle once or twice, but they did not tell her much of what she wanted to know. Bessie's letters were, it is true, full of allusions of what Capt. Niel was doing, but she did not go beyond that. Her reticence, however, told her observant sister more than her words. Why was she so reticent? No doubt because things still hung in the balance. And then she would think of what it all meant for her, and now and again give way to an outburst of passionate jealousy, which would have been painful enough to witness if anybody could have been there to see it.

And so the time went on toward Christmas, for Jess, having been warmly pressed to do so, had settled to stay over Christmas and return to the farm with the new year. There had been a great deal of talk in the town about the Boers, but she was too much preoccupied with her own affairs to pay much attention to it. Nor, indeed, was the public mind greatly moved; they were so much accustomed to Boer scares at Pretoria, and hitherto they had invariably ended in smoke. And then all of a sudden, on the morning of the 18th of December, came the news of the proclamation of the republic, and the town was thrown into a ferment, and there was a talk of going into laager, and, anxious as she was to get away, Jess could see no hope of returning to the farm till the excitement was over. Then a day or two later Conductor Egerton came limping into Pretoria from the scene of the disaster at Bronker's Spruit, with the colors of the Ninety-fourth regiment tied round his middle, and such a tale to tell that the blood went to her heart and seemed to stagnate there as she listened to it.

And after that there was confusion worse confounded. Martial law was proclaimed, and the town, which was large, straggling and incapable of defense, was abandoned, the inhabitants being ordered into laager on the high ground overlooking the city. There they were, young and old, sick and well, delicate women and little children, all crowded together in the open under the cover of the fort, with nothing but canvas tents, wagons and sheds to shelter them from the fierce summer suns and rains. Jess had to share a wagon with her friend and her friend's sister and mother, and found it rather a tight fit even to lie down. Sleep, with all the noises of the camp going on round her, was a practical impossibility.

SCOTLAND.

A great many young men are emigrating this season from Clyne to Canada.

The Udston Colliery Disaster Fund in Scotland has now reached about £5,000.

The Marquis of Bute was to unveil a bronze statue of Wallace outside the Wallace Monument, Stirling, on Tuesday.

Prentice Brothers, Stowmarket, have presented £400 worth of chemical fertilisers to the poor crofters in the islands and mainland.

The steel-belted cruiser Australia went down the Clyde on the 2nd June on her official trial trip, and attained a speed of 19¼ knots per hour.

Two men were killed and four others injured by the fall of scaffolding at the Forth Bridge on the 2nd June, and another crushed to death the next day.

A native of Dundee sent a sum to treat on Jubilee day about three hundred sick, aged and infirm poor in Dundee not in receipt of parochial relief.

On the 3rd June an explosion of gas occurred at the Cafe, Shiprow, Aberdeen. On arriving, Alex. Booth, fireman, entered the building and immediately dropped dead.

It is asserted that a proportionately greater number of students trained in the Free Church College at Aberdeen have gone abroad as missionaries than have gone from either Edinburgh or Glasgow.

The Inverness folk are trying to arrange regular excursions to Culloden, Cawdor, Drumnadrochit and Kilmorack, so as to induce tourists to prolong their stay, and give the hotelkeepers more time to make their hay.

Sir Hugh Hume Campbell has presented to the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art, an interesting collection of objects of classical antiquity in bronze, earthenware, glass and other materials, collected by himself in Italy about fifty years ago.

There is an old soldier of the Royal Artillery named Guthrie, residing in Galashiels, who served in the army in the reign of George IV, William IV, and who was one of his regiment who fired a feu de joie in the island of Antigua, on the occasion of the accession of Queen Victoria.

The Queen's jubilee was celebrated in Glasgow on the 16th. A grand memorial religious service was held in the Cathedral. 6,000 people were given a dinner at the public expense. One of the features was the review of 1,000 troops. A number of banquets and balls were given in the evening.

Davis'-Pain-Killer is the best medicine in the world for all Diseases of the Bowels.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

The Mayor of Manchester died on the 9th of June, aged 80 years. He was head of the great machinist firm of Curtis Sons & Co. On the occasion of the royal visit a few weeks ago he overtaxed his strength, and proceeded to Spain to recruit.

The Pope has sent the Queen one of the most splendid pieces of mosaic ever seen, as a jubilee gift. It is a perfectly admirable copy of Raphael's representation of poetry in the Stanza Della Segnatura, which is one of the most wonderful art treasures of the Vatican.

The Superiority of the "Royal Flavoring Extracts," is purity and strength.

A novel kind of conflagration is going on in North Wales, where Glyn-Dyfr Dwy, one of the mountains of the Berwyn range, was set ablaze by a shepherd lighting his pipe on Tuesday. The whole surface for many miles in extent is covered with peat, and a fire is burning fiercely. The farmers and laborers of the whole surrounding country are digging trenches day and night in a vain effort to stop the fire, which will burn for a month at least. Vast numbers of rabbits, hares and grouse have been destroyed by smoke and fire. The spectacle is said to be one of great impressiveness.

"Some said, 'John, print it,' others said 'Not so,'
Some said, 'It might do good,' others said, 'No.'"

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled. Dr. Thos. Prim, Ala., says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child eight months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Reading.

On Tuesday afternoon the competition for the ten dollar gold piece, presented by Mr. D. W. Dumble, to be awarded to the best reader among those attending the Collegiate Institute, was held in the Institute building. The Rev. F. H. Wallace, M. A., B.D., examined the competitors. He was unable to decide between two of the pupils, Miss Ruth Hethrington and Miss Lilian Ritchie. He accordingly recommended that a five dollar gold piece be given to each.

A CHOICE selection of heavy double and twisted Cottonades, just the thing for harvesting, now in stock at TURNBULL'S.

Grand Concert.

Attention is directed to an advertisement in another column which gives particulars of the grand Concert to be given on the evening of July 13th by the Listemann-Kellog Concert Company, under the auspices of the Lansdowne Rowing Club. This Concert troupe is one of the best travelling, and the Lansdowne Club deserve great credit for their enterprise in bringing the Company here. Tickets are being rapidly sold, and there is scarcely any doubt but that long before the 13th every available seat will be secured.

DAY OF DECORATION.

THE ODDFELLOWS' CEREMONY WITNESSED BY LARGE NUMBERS.

The Cemetery Laden With Floral Tributes—The Graves of the Deceased Brethren Decorated.

Tuesday, the day set apart by the Oddfellows to decorate the graves of deceased brethren, was taken advantage of by nearly all those having friends laid in the Little Lake Cemetery, for the same purpose. The da, was bright and warm and nothing occurred to mar the success of the day's proceedings.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the brethren of Mount Hebron Encampment, Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, and Peterborough Lodge, No. 111, assembled in the Central Park, and about half an hour after marshalled by Bro. Bell, P. G., marched down street in the following order:—

THE PROCESSION

Fire Brigade Band.
Brethren of Otonabee and Peterborough Lodges.
The Officers of the Lodges.
Banner.
Mount Hebron Encampment.
Officers of Mount Hebron Encampment.
Past Grands.
Noble Grands.

The brethren appeared in black coats, white gloves and silk hats, making an exceedingly respectable appearance. The procession was followed by hacks and vehicles of different kinds, and the sidewalks were lined with foot passengers.

AT THE CEMETERY

gate the procession halted and reversed, and in that order marched to the front of the Chapel. Bro. J. L. Hughes led in prayer and Bro. T. Workman, N. G., of Otonabee Lodge, delivered a short address setting forth the object of the members of the order in paying this annual tribute to the deceased brethren. The band played and the Oddfellows and people sang "Nearer my God to Thee." The Decoration Committee then proceeded to lay the flowers on the graves of the deceased brethren, the graves decorated being those of:—

Bro. Judge J. B. Hall, ex-M. P., 1st N. G., Otonabee Lodge.
Bro. Sheriff W. S. Conger, ex-M.P., 2nd N. G., Otonabee Lodge.
Bro. Charles Perry, ex-M. P., 1st V. G., Otonabee Lodge.
Bro. Col. McDonnell, Otonabee Lodge.
" Sheriff Hall, " "
" Samuel Albro, " "
" Dr. Wm. Bell, " "
" James Hamilton, " "
" Wm. Gilbert, Peterborough Lodge.
" Alex. Baptie, " "
" Wm. Hall, Otonabee Lodge.
" W. H. Wrighton, " "
" James Jenkins, " "
" A. Sawers, " "
" F. Ferguson, " "
" W. H. Scott, ex-M.P.P., Peterborough Lodge.
Bro. James Ferguson, Otonabee Lodge.
" James Harvey, " "
" E. Chamberlain, " "
" T. J. H. Bucket, Peterborough Lodge.
" James Martin, " "
" J. L. Hughes, Otonabee Lodge.
" J. Robinson, " "
" Thomas Fortye, " "
" Dr. Allen, Peterborough Lodge.
" Dr. Bennett, " "
" A. White, " "
" A. Tully, Otonabee Lodge.
" D. Carlisle, Peterborough Lodge.

" Dr. McNab, " "
" Samuel White, Peterborough Lodge.
" James Foley, Otonabee Lodge.
" Fred. Rubidge, " "
" Capt. Fraser, " "
" J. Haggart, " "

While the ceremony of decorating the graves was in progress the Fire Brigade Band, stationed at the end of the chapel, gave a number of selections of sacred music. The Cemetery looked very pretty on "Decoration Day." Mr. Kelly spared no pains to make it look its best. The walks and drives were scrupulously clean, and the flower beds exhibited persistent care. The fountain facing the entrance was crowned with a garland of roses. Mr. Kelly not only looked after the beautifying of the Cemetery, but also the convenience of the people. Casks of ice water were placed here and there, so that the thirsty might avail themselves of it.

At about 5 o'clock the procession re-formed, but before doing so an appropriate departure was taken of the City of the Dead. Bro. W. A. Stratton delivered a suitable address, and Bro Smith, Chaplain of Peterborough Lodge, led in prayer. "The Sweet Bye-and-Bye" was then sung, the Band playing the accompaniment. The brethren then marched away and the people followed.

The march was made as far as the Otonabee Lodge Hall, where the brethren assembled. Short speeches were made by Bro. Workman, Bro. Moore, Bro. Stratton and Bro. Henderson. Votes of thanks were passed to the ladies for their bountiful supply of flowers, to the visiting brethren for attending, and to the Council for watering the street as far as the Cemetery.

DONORS OF FLOWERS.

The names of those who donated flowers are as follows:—Rev. V. Clementi, basket of cut flowers; Mrs. (Sheriff) Hall, two hand boquets, for Peterborough Lodge; Mrs. B. Cooney, six hand boquets, two wreaths, one sickle and one crescent; Mrs. Geo. Stethem, two baskets of cut flowers, for Otonabee Lodge; Mrs. J. Carey, one hand boquet; Mr. A. Clegg, cut flowers, for Peterborough Lodge; Mrs. W. M. Fitzgerald, two boquets, for Peterborough Lodge; Mrs. T. Hooper, two baskets of cut flowers, for Peterborough Lodge; Mrs. Sheffield, large basket of roses; Mrs. Tucker, hand boquet; Mrs. J. Fraser, three hand boquets; Mrs. Jas. Keadry, flowers; Mrs. R. Fife, flowers; Mrs. Wm. Spence, flowers; Mrs. Sanderson, Smith, flowers; Mrs. Sawers, floral three links; Miss Chamberlain, hand boquet, for Otonabee Lodge, Mrs. J. Burnham, Ashburnham, six hand boquets; Mrs. J. Stavenson, one hand boquet, for Otonabee Lodge; Mrs. J. McKee, one hand boquet, for Otonabee Lodge; Mrs. Watt, button hole boquets; Mrs. A. Hall, a bunch of roses.

NOTES.

The banner which preceded Mount Hebron Encampment in the procession was presented to the Camp by Miss Errett. It is handsome and very artistically designed and finished. The all seeing eye, and other emblems of the order, are worked on the satin ground.

The Golden Eye plied between the Wolfe street wharf, Ashburnham and the Cemetery Point. Several hundred people were carried back and forth.

Mr. R. M. Roy, took instantaneous photographs of the procession at various poents.

Bro. Ferris represented Campbellford; Bro. Bickle, Cobourg, and Bro. Dench, Lakefield.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

REVIEWS.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.—The July number of Harper has for its frontispiece one of a series of charming illustrations by E. A. Abbey of the old ballad "Philiada." In the opening article R. R. Bowkes gives a very readable account of the production of "A Printed Book," in continuation of his "Great American Industries." "Cadet Life at West Point" is pleasantly described by Capt. Chas. King. We are introduced by Joseph Thompson, the African traveller, to little known scenes in his sketch of "A Central Soudanese Town." Mrs. Davis commences what promises to be an entertaining series of articles entitled "Here and there in the South." We in Canada may learn useful lessons as to the benfit to be derived from devoting our energies to developing the resources of the country instead of spending them in sectional strife and fratricidal jealousies, and may learn to do so before instead of after futile attempts at disruption. All the articles we have so far mentioned are profusely illustrated in the style which has rendered Harper unique. Dr. Ely in his "Social Studies," discusses "The future of Corporations," not municipalities but trading and similar companies; a subject which has a growing interest for all civilized communities, if it is more pressingly urgent in the United States. In "Mexican Notes" some picturesque cities, rather out of the beaten track, are pleasingly described by C. D. Warner. The serial novels "April Hopes" by Howells, and "Narka" by Kathleen O'Meara, both pregress with increasing interest in their widely different styles, and the short tales are exceptionally good. We miss somewhat the original poetry which in Harper is always of a high order. The editorial miscellaneous are full of their usual interest, and the number is completed by one of Dr. Manrier's inimitable "Society" sketches.

A VISIT FROM U. S. SHIPS OF WAR.

Not an Invasion—Warning Their Own Fishermen Not to Poach.

NEWPORT, R.I., June 28.—The sailing of the North Atlantic squadron for down East with the official announcement that it was destined for Canadian waters, has aroused the slumbering fires of jingoism that have subsided since the Fishery disputs has simmered down. The whole coast has been thrown into a fever of excitement by the belief that this great naval display of old hulks was to bulldoze the Canadians into a less exacting enforcement of the fishery regulations. Those who based any such absurd construction on the squadron's cruise are sadly mistaken. Admiral Luce this morning, when talking to a reporter, stated that the fleet was bound on no bulldozing errand, but for a friendly and conciliatory purpose. He says that when the English cruisers fall in with him there it will be his aim, as he knows that of the English officers will be, to increase the friendly feeling which existed between the two nations. He has no idea of even commenting on any existing maritime laws of the Dominion, and says that he hopes no American will be so foolish as to make any attempt at illegal fishing on his visit. When he learns what the forbidden waters exactly are he will not hesitate to board any fishing vessel of his own nationality he finds therein, and summarily order them off. He tried to get several tons of coal here for the steamer Ossippee, which goes direct to the fishing grounds, but being unable will get what he wants at Halifax. The Yantic, Richmond and Galena proceed to Boston for some slight repairs before sailing north. The fleet will remain in Canadian waters until the end of August. They will visit all the principal Nova Scotia ports, besides Portland, Bath, Belfast and Bar Harbor.

MR. CHAPLEAU.

His Health Improved so Much that He Will not go to Spencerwood.

The Montreal Gazette's Ottawa correspondent says: I am authorized to state that Hon. Mr. Chapleau has definitely decided not to accept the Lietenant-Govenorship of Quebec, and will not withdraw from the Cabinet. It is understood that some time ago, his health not being good, he was strongly advised by his physicians to retire at least for a while, from active politics, and that he intimated his desire to do so. When Mr. Masson tendered his resignation, which, by the way, has not yet been accepted, the position was offered to Mr. Chapleau, and he was at first disposed to accept it, but his health having improved and his friends unwilling that he should retire, even temporarily, from active politics, he has reconsidered his decision and determined not to withdraw from the Cabinet.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

Important Changes in their Constitution Adopted—Co-operation Promoted.

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—By returns made to the general headquarters of the Knights of Labor the new constitution of the Order, embodying many important changes, has been adopted by about a three-fourths vote. A clause providing for the formation of national trades assemblies, sent out separately from the constitution and voted upon by the local assemblies throughout the Order, has also been adopted by nearly the same vote. The new constitut on will be promulgated by the General Executive Board in a few days. An analysis of the vote shows that nearly one-half of the local assemblies that opposed the adoption of the new constitution did so on account of section 325, which reads:—"No local or other assembly or member shall directly or indirectly give, sell or have any ale, beer or intoxicating liquors of any kind at any meeting, party, sociable, ball, picnic or entertainment whatever appertaining to the Order. Any member found guilty of violating this law shall be suspended for not less than six months or expelled. No fine shall be imposed for this offence. Any local or other Assembly so offending shall be suspended during the pleasure of the General Executive Board, or shall have its charter revoked by said Board." The article on co-operation was adopted unanimously. It is quite lengthy, and provides for the creation and disbursement of a fund to aid co-operative enterprises. The constitution gives the General Executive Board full power to settle all strikes and disputes, and increases the power of the General Board in many other particulars.

LEVEL-HEADED FARMERS.

Dundas County Agriculturalists Opposed to Commercial Union.

IROQUOIS, Ont., June 28.—At a largely attended meeting of the Dundas County Farmers' Institute, held at Brinston Corners to-day, Dr. Harkness in the chair, Mr. Adam Harkness of Iroquois, Reeve of Matilda moved, seconded by S. C. Doran of Matilda:

1. That it is in the interests of the farming community to give such reasonable encouragements to other industries as will tend to increase the consuming population and furnish an enlarged home market for the surplus produce of the farm.

2. That it is desirable to promote trade with all foeign countries, especially such as do not produce a sufficient food supply for themselves.

3. That while it would be desirable, and in some respects in the interests of the Canadian farmer, to secure greater freedom of trade with the United States, the similarity of the surplus products of the two countries renders it improbable that any considerable advantage would result. The abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty in 1886, by stimulating our people to seek direct trade with the consumers instead of shipping through American channels, has been advantageous rather than injurious to the farmers in this part of Canada.

4. That no arrangement whereby we would yield control of our foreign trade or internal taxation, or that would interfere with our right to make treaties with such countries as might afford a market for our surplus produce, would be acceptable to the farmers of Canada.

5. That we desire to enter an earnest protest against the continual disparagement of the farmers of this country, now so commonly indulged in by professing friends, and to express the belief that they are not inferior to those of any other country.

It was moved in amendment by M. D. Willard, a member of the Executive Committee of the Central Farmers' Institute, seconded by W. A. Whitney, M. A., Morrisburg:

That in the opinion of this Dundas County Farmers' Institute, a removal of the restrictions on trade between the Dominion of Canada and the United States is desirable on a fair and equitable basis, either by a reciprocity treaty or otherwise, as may be agreed upon by the Governments of Canada, Great Britain and the United States respectively.

Dr. Hickey, M. P., Adam Harkness and Dr. Harkness spoke to the original motion, while M. D. Willard, W. A. Whitney, James Clark and others dealt with the amendment.

The amendment was put first and then Mr. Harkness' motion, which was carried by a large majority. Dundas County is one of the oldest and wealthiest in Canada, and this pronuncio against commercial union is the result of a thorough understanding of the object of the Willardites.

The Heroes of Batoche.

KINGSTON June 29.—At the camp Major General Middleton presented clasps to the following under fire at Batoche: Major Hughes, Capt. Grace, Capt Clines, Lieuts. Holtorf, Laidlaw, McMurchy, McCullough, Sergts. Irwin, Stacey, Keegan, Fraser Gain, Hepburn, Corpls. Gregory and Just, Private Williamson. All are of the 45th Batt., except Capt. Clines and Lieut. McCullough, who are of the 46th.

FIVE DIVISIONS.—At a recent meeting of the Belmont and Methuen council a by-law was passed dividing the township into five polling sub-divisions, instead of three as formerly.

NORWOOD VS. STIRLING.—The Norwood and Stirling lacrosse clubs cross sticks on Dominion Day on the grounds of the latter. Norwood sends a "scratch" team, quite a number of their best players being away.—Register.

COBOURG.

SPLENDID WORK.—The Sentinel-Star says that Mr. Crossen has shipped from his works here, this week and last some magnificent sleepers, finished in and out, with the finest finish. The work turned out of the Cobourg works, for the class, are as good as can be made anywhere. He is now at work on some magnificent cars for the Intercolonial.

VERY FORTUNATE.—We are informed that by the death of an uncle in England the three sons of Mr. Hayes, proprietor of the red mill, north of the town, fall heirs to the sum of £40,000 each. We congratulate them on their luck.

KEENE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MASONIC EXCURSION.—On the Festival of St. John the Baptist the Masons of Keene Lodge and their friends to the number of about forty celebrated the occasion by a private excursion to Bewdley. They left at nine o'clock in the morning on the steamer Dora, and after a very pleasant sail arrived at their destination. Here they found a magnificent spread prepared by mine host Nixon, and full justice was done to it after the appetizing breeze on Rice Lake. After some hours very pleasantly spent at this beautiful spot the party re-embarked for home, calling at Gore's Landing and Idyl Wild on their way. They arrived at Keene about seven in the evening, every one expressing themselves well pleased with the day's trip.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—On Sunday there were anniversary services of the Presbyterian Church in the morning and evening. Both the sermons were preached by the Rev. D. McCrae of Cobourg, who delivered very eloquent and stirring addresses. [illegible] in aid of the church funding that was amounted to $170. There were large congregations.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC.—The Union Sunday School picnic will be held on Wednesday, July 6th, at Bewdley. The Beaver with a scow attached will leave Keene at 8 a. m. sharp.

ORANGE.—At a special meeting on Tuesday evening of Otonabee District and of Keene Lodge, L.O.L. it was resolved to celebrate the 12th of July in Peterborough.

INDIAN PICNIC.—The annual Dominion Day picnic at Hiawatha will be held as usual this year. The Indians of the melodiously named village have prepared an extensive programme of games and sports, including hawk-ball. The celebrated Indian brass band from Ainwick will be in attendance.

BUSINESS CHANGE.—Mr. Jas. Arthur McCann has succeeded his late respected father in his boot and shoe business. He reports business quite brisk.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

From our own Correspondent.

PUBLIC SCHOOL PICNIC.—The public school picnic was held here, in Mr. A. Webster's grove, on Saturday, the 25th June and was a complete success, the weather being most favorable for the games which were on the grounds. The following is a list of the games:—A base ball match played between the school club of this place and the second nine from Cavanville, which resulted in favor of the school club, the score being 45 to 15. A croquet match for girls only:—1st Florence Sanderson, 2nd Ella Best, 3rd May Mills. Auger match, open to all:—1st Wm. Fisher, 2nd J. Finney, 3rd Ormand Rowan. Indian potatoe race, open to school only:—1st R. F. Mills, 2nd Everett Ewing, O. Rowan and A. W. Kilpatrick were equal, and the 3rd prize was divided between them. Flat race for school boys 12 years of upwards:—1st R. F. Mills, 2nd Robt. Playfair, 3rd Everett Ewing. A flat race for school boys, 12 years or below it:—1st Wilbert Best, 2nd Henry Bland, 3rd Percy McLean. An archery match at which six pairs tried their skill;—1st Wm. Hickson and J. C. Murdock, 2nd Jos. Hayes and John Boyd. A tug of war for the young men in which captain John Bloxom's side won. A tug of war for the boys, in which captain Louis Wilson's side won. The games were all well contested, and every person present seemed to enjoy the afternoon's sport. The band was on the ground and supplied excellent music, which added greatly to the picnic.

Imperial Federation League.

MONTREAL, June 29.—The second annual meeting of the Montreal Branch of the Imperial Federation League was held in the Natural History Rooms last evening, Mr. Henry Lyman presiding. Mr. Archibald McGoun, jr., read the annual report, referring, among other things, to the part which the delegates of the Montreal branch had taken in the Imperial Federation Conference and at the meetings of the Executive in London. The first representative gathering of all the self-governing colonies was a matter for congratulation. The officers for the ensuing year were then elected as follows:—Chairman, Mr. Henry Lyman; Vice-Chairmen, Messrs. Hugh McLennan and Jno. Lewis; Treasurer, Mr. K. C. Lyman; Secretary, Mr. Arch. McGoun, jr.; comalittee, Messrs. W. W. L. Chipman, F. W. Thomas, A. W. Nicholls, Geo. Hague, J. H. Oake, H. H. Lyman, Alex. Johnston, R. C. Smith, W. G. Beers, Jas. Stephenson and Edgar Judge. Mr. Arch. McGoun, jr., read an exhaustive paper "On Commercial Union with the United States," after which the meeting dispersed.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

FRANCE CAN'T DO IT.

LONDON, June 29.—It is reported that M. Waddington, the French Ambassador here, has informed Lord Salisbury that no French Cabinet could sign a document giving England a preponderance in Egypt, even for a limited time.

WON'T SIGN.

LONDON, June 29.—The impression prevails in diplomatic circles that the Sultan will not sign the Egyptian convention. It is said England will gain more by its failure than by its adoption.

KING MILAN.

LONDON, June 29.—The Chronicle's Vienna correspondent insists that, in spite of official denials, King Milan intends to abdicate the throne of Servia as soon as he returns to Belgrade on Friday. Queen Natalie will return from the Crimea about the middle of July.

POLICE PELTED.

DUBLIN, June 29.—A body of police was attacted by a mob on St. Stephen's Green yesterday. Stones and other missiles were thrown at the officers who, however, soon dispersed their assailants.

THE POPE'S MISSION.

DUBLIN, June 28.—Archbishop Walsh denies that he offered any opposition to the Pope's proposal to send Mgr. Persico on a mission to Ireland.

THE LEAGUE TO BE PROCLAIMED.

LONDON, June 29.—The Standard says: It is understood that on the passage of the Crimes Bill the Government will issue a special proclamation declaring the National League in Kerry, Clare and Cork an illegal association, and will also proclaim those counties and bring them within the range of the secret enquiry and summary jurisdiction clauses of the Act.

THE QUEEN'S MOVEMENTS.

LONDON, June 29.—The Queen will leave Windsor for Osborne on July 12th. On August 26th the court will remove to Balmoral for the autumn. It is said that Her Majesty personally selected the designs for the new coins.

ANGRY WITH GERMANY.

PARIS, June 29.—The National, in a fiery article complaining that Germany is constantly laboring by taunts and insults to exasperate France, urges the expulsion of all German residents belonging to German Kreigsvereins.

FRENCH MILITARY SERVICE.

PARIS, June 29.—The Chamber of Deputies, by 273 to 240, has agreed to the clause of the Army Bill providing that students of the Normal school may be drilled at the school, and that the time thus spent shall be considered equivalent to the military service.

PICTURES CONFISCATED.

PARIS, June 29.—The police have confiscated the entire issue of a picture representing Gen. Boulanger as the "Saviour of France," prepared for distribution during the fetes.

IRISH LAW OFFICERS.

DUBLIN, June 29.—It is stated that Mr. Holmes, Attorney-General, is about to be raised to the Irish Bench as Justice of the Court of Common Pleas; that Mr. Gibson, Solicitor-General, will succeed him as Attorney-General, and that Sergeant Peter O'Brien will become Solicitor-General.

THE GHILZAIS DEFEATED.

LONDON, June 29.—A despatch from Simla says Gholam Haider Khan has defeated the Ghilzais near Istadeh, and killed a large number of them.

TURN ABOUT.

LONDON, June 29.—Advices from Afghanistan report two days fighting in the Bukar district. The Ghilzais were defeated on the first day, but on the second day they were victorious, and at last accounts were pursuing the Ameer's troops.

A SURPRISE.

PARIS, June 29.—The newspapers assert that Gen. Boulanger was unaware of the Government's intention to appoint him to the command of the 13th Army Corps until he saw the announcement of the actual appointment in the press.

LORD LANSDOWNE'S ESTATES.

DUBLIN, June 29.—Three orders for the ejectment of tenants on the Marquis of Lansdowne's Luggacurran estate were obtained to-day. Lord Lansdowne's counsel said the tenants in question would not be evicted if they paid their rent.

MGR. MANNING AND THE TIMES.

A Sharp Letter on the Statement Regarding Separatist Proclivities.

LONDON, June 29.—Cardinal Manning writes to the Times protesting against its circulation of the statement from Rome that the Irish mission of Mgr. Persico and Mgr. Guaidi had been revoked at the instance of Cardinal Manning and Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, and branding the latter two as active promoters of separatist intrigues. The Cardinal says: "I gladly unite myself with Archbishop Walsh. He is but slightly known in England except in the descriptions of those who are fanning the flames of animosity between England and Ireland. I am known in England both to ministers of the Crown and to the leaders of the Opposition, and I will leave it to them who know my mind, to answer for me, and I, who know the mind of Archbishop Walsh, will answer for him. We are neither intriguers nor Separatists." In conclusion the Cardinal says: "If, sir, I have written with unusual warmth, I confess that I hold that resentment is sometimes a duty, and this is such a time, when your words touch our highest responsibility and inflame more and more the heated condition between two peoples whom justice and truth would still bind in peace and unity. I ask you, sir, as an act of justice, to give this as prominent a place in the Times as you have given to the unhappy imputations."

The Times, in an editorial, excuses the first charge which Cardinal Manning complains of by stating it had simply reproduced a Reuter Telegram Company's despatch from Rome. It assures the Cardinal that it has no desire to meet the other charge by either gloss or evasion. If it should judge Archbishop Walsh by his own written and spoken words, he was in a very strict sense of the word a Separatist. It was sorry if it had been wrongly led to believe that Cardinal Manning was a firm supporter of Mr. Gladstone's Separatist policy, but if the facts were so, no peculiar interpretation of language could alter them.

THE NATIONAL POLICY.

In reference to the proposed railroad from Winnipeg to divert traffic from the Canadian to the United States railway system, the London Advertiser insinuates that the Ontario volunteers would mutiny if sent to maintain the laws of our country and adds:—"In this section of the country it is not regarded as a criminal offence to build a railway." Is that so? Well, let the Advertiser start to-morrow to build a railway along the street in front of its office to give it easy access to the main line, and it would soon find that it is held a criminal offence to break the law.

Reform partizans and interested speculators have raised a commotion for their own selfish purposes, and they have led away many unthinking men by the false claim that the question is one of provincial, local autonomy, and that it is harsh for the Dominion to thwart the wishes of people in the locality. Some who should know better have been deluded by this unjustifiable special pleading. The spirit, if not the very letter, of our constitution provides that the Dominion, not the Provinces, shall have jurisdiction as to questions of means of communication with a foreign country or between the Provinces. We believe that this is even according to the letter, for what other interpretation can be put upon the provision of the British North American Act giving to the Dominion jurisdiction as to "Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting the Province with any other or others of the Provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the Province?" Even if the letter is held to be ambiguous, there can be no doubt from this and other clauses that such is the spirit of our constitution. The veto power was given chiefly for the purpose of guarding the general interests of the country from being prejudiced by sectional action, and the present is manifestly a case where disallowance may be applied if considered expedient.

The people of Canada have deliberately adopted the policy of building up and consolidating the Dominion by rendering it as far as possible self-dependent. The gigantic enterprise of a great railway through our own territory from ocean to ocean, was, like our protective tariff and [illegible] in the case, a part of this policy. The people of Manitoba and the Northwest, or those of them who were then there, assented like those of other parts of Canada to this policy, and, the majority of them have since gone there knowing it to be the settled policy of the country. Yet now under the pretence that it is a mere local matter they are claiming the right to reverse the policy of the whole Dominion, to prefer the railways of the United States instead of Canadian lines, to buy manufactured goods from the manufacturers not of the Dominion, but of the United States, and to ship their surplus produce from New York rather than from Canadian ports. They accepted willingly that portion of this great policy from which they especially derived a benefit, the construction of a costly trans-continental route without which Winnipeg might have remained merely a flourishing village, and now they claim the right to render this great national work valueless to the vast majority of the people of the Dominion, to build up at their cost a foreign country. If they had told their fellow countrymen before this enormous expenditure was incurred that they wished to unite themselves in all but name to the neighboring Republic, it would have been far cheaper to have let the Northern Pacific collect its own traffic by the construction of feeding lines from the northward at intervals. Winnipeg then would have been of no more importance than Brandon, Regina, Moosejaw, Calgary, or a score of other distributing centres each with its branch line. Having been built up by the policy and at the cost of the whole Dominion, it now aims at using the advantages thus conferred for obtaining an alliance with foreigners for their mutual aggrandizement at the expense of the Dominion. And if they succeeded what is their to prevent Brandon from playing the same trick to Winnipeg?

While the people of Winnipeg pleaded for a competing Canadian line, we, like many others heartily sympathized with them and advocated the hastening of this boon as much as possible. But now that their noisy spokesmen have openly avowed that their aim is to establish commercial relations with foreigners and to regard all the people of the Dominion outside their own Province as aliens with whom they should have no dealings that they can avoid, they cannot expect to retain such sympathy while they persevere in such dishonest selfishness.

We are told by the Globe that in a number of cases the changes in the tariff were arranged "to make millionaires out of special government favorites." If the Globe is correct, we will give it a hint that may put money in the pockets of some of its friends by a simple expedient which does not appear to have attracted its attention. Let it persuade some of its friends to invest capital to compete with the favored men and share in the millions to be obtained in these favorite industries. If it speaks to too many of its friends their competition may result in their each obtaining only a fair profit, but then the consumer will have the benefit of lower prices. Such will be the effect indeed, whether the Globe's friends join in the competition or not. Large profits will infallibly invite an influx of capital.

IRELAND.

That "the Bible is the only and the real cure for Irish disloyalty and discontent" is the burden of the 66th annual report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

Intimation has been received in Belfast to the effect that both the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Irish Chief Secretary will visit that town during the autumn.

Early on Wednesday morning, June 1st, 100 head of cattle from the Kerry estate of the Marquis of Lansdowne were brought to stock the two principal vacant farms at Luggacurran.

The Clifford property in Killala was finally disposed of at a sale in the Court House, Ballina, on May 30th. It was knocked down to Dr. McNulty at £165, being £5 less than the highest offer at the previous sale, while Dr. McNulty's offer at the first sale was £225.

The Presbyterian Assembly was opened in Belfast on the 6th of June with a sermon by the outgoing moderator, Rev. R. Ross, of Londonderry. Dr. J. H. Orr, of Antrim, Clerk of the Assembly, was unanimously elected to the chair.

Special telegraphic communication is being established between London and Cork, so as to avoid the possibility of having official messages tapped; and a cipher has been arranged in London and Dublin, and entrusted to resident magistrates only, these arangements being made, it is supposed, in view of the expected passing of the Coercion Bill.

A factory has been established at Kinsale for the making of every description of fishing nets. A company has been formed, and when the factory is developed it will give much employment. Hitherto a large amount of money has been yearly diverted to England for nets and fishing gear. Kinsale is the first place in Ireland where such a factory has been established.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland on 10th June adopted a jubilee address to the Queen, in which the hope is expressed that no change will be made tending to weaken the Union or to endanger the integrity of the empire. It also adopted a resolution agreeing to erect an Assembly Hall as the best mode of celebrating the Queen's jubilee.

On the 31st of May a lady arriving in Ballymena, from New York, engaged a messenger to carry a parcel containing jewelry and articles valued for £160, and subsequently the youth inadvertently handed the parcel to another lady in the train, receiving a penny for his trouble. After close inquiries the police succeeded in discovering the last mentioned lady and the parcel in a gentleman's residence adjoining Cullabackey, where the receiver of the parcel had gone to do upholstery work.

It is the intention of the Nationalist members of the Sligo Corporation to resign in a body should the address which it is proposed to draw up for presentation to the Queen be adopted. Although the council consists of twenty-four members, fourteen of whom are Catholics, it is conjectured that four of these, who hold the commission of the peace, will side with their Tory brethren. A reliable authority has it that a certain "Liberal member" of the council has been asked to draw up the address in conjunction with the Mayor. Popular feeling is running high.

ENGLAND.

Nearly 400 addresses of congratulation to Her Majesty on the Jubilee have pased through the Home Office.

The annual dinner of the 71st (Highland Light Infantry) was held at the Albion, Aldersgate street, London, on the 7th of June.

The new coins were issued through the medium of the Bank of England on Monday, so that they could come into circulation on Jubilee Day.

The Royal Caledonian Fancy Dress Ball, which is always one of the leading features of the fashionable season in London, is fixed to take place on the first of July.

Mr. T. H. Ismay, of the White Star Line of Steamers, has offered, as a Jubilee gift, to contribute £20,000 towards the formation of a Liverpool seamen's pension fund.

The "father" of Stockport Town Council who has filled the post of Mayor, was on 8th June remanded for a week on a charge of misappropriating about £4,000 of trust funds.

It is stated that rumours have been current for some time of the defalcations of the manager of a London branch bank, the amount involved being mentioned at from £12,000 to £16,000.

An attempt, backed up by the influence of Lord Houghton, is being made to revive the dukedom of York, and to urge that it be bestowed upon one of the Queen's grandsons in this her Jubilee year.

The Hotel Victoria, which is about to be opened in Northumberland Avenue, London, is quite a palace, so far as marble and gilding, painting and carving, with fine architectural proportions, can make one.

The Queen gave special permission for the repetition of the Jubilee thanksgiving service in Westminster Abbey on the day after the State service. The seats were to be sold for the benefit of the London hospitals.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

It was about 3 o'clock on the day following that first miserable night in the laager when, by the last mail that passed into Pretoria, she got Bessie's letter announcing her engagement to John. She took her letter and went some way from the camp to the side of Signal Hill, where she was not likely to be disturbed, and, finding a nook shaded in by mimosa trees, sat down and broke the envelope. Before she had got to the foot of the first page she saw what was coming and set her teeth. Then she read the long letter through from beginning to end without flinching, though the words of affection seemed to burn her. So it had come at last. Well, she expected it, and had plotted to bring it about, so really there was no reason in the world why she should feel disappointed. On the contrary, she ought to rejoice, and for a little while she really did rejoice in her sister's happiness. It made her happy to think that Bessie, whom she dearly loved, was happy.

And yet she felt angry with John with that sort of anger which we feel against those who have blindly injured us. Why should he have it in his power to hurt her so? Still she hoped that he would be happy with Bessie, and then she hoped that these wretched Boers would take Pretoria, and that she would be shot or put out of the way somehow. She had no heart for life; all the color had faded from her sky. What was she to do with herself? She would not stop on the farm after John and Bessie were married; she was quite clear as to that; nor, if she could avoid it, would she return there before they were married. She would see him no more, no more! Alas, that she had ever seen him.

Feeling somewhat happier, or at any rate calmer, in this determination, she rose to return to the noisy camp, extending her walk, however, by making a detour toward the Heidelberg road, for she was anxious to be as long alone as she could. She had been walking some ten minutes when she caught sight of a cart that seemed familiar to her, with three horses harnessed in front of it and one tied on behind, which were also familiar. There were a lot of men walking alongside of the cart, all talking eagerly. She halted to let the little procession go by, when suddenly she perceived John Niel among the men and recognized the Zulu Mouti on the box. There was the man whom she had just vowed never to see again, and the sight of him seemed to take all her strength out of her, so that she felt inclined to sink involuntarily upon the veldt. His sudden appearance was almost [illegible] to the largeness of its illustration of [illegible] it then; all in an instant it seemed to be borne in upon her mind that she could not help herself, but was only the instrument in the hands of a superior power whose will she was fulfilling through the workings of her passion and to whom her individual fate was a matter of little moment. It was inconclusive reasoning and perilous doctrine, but it must be allowed that the circumstances gave it the color of truth. And, after all, the border line between fatalism and free will has never been quite authoritatively settled, even by St. Paul, so perhaps she was right. Mankind does not like to admit it, but it is, at the least, a question whether we can oppose our little wills against the forces of the universal law or derange the details of the unvarying plan to suit the petty wants and hopes of individual mortality. Jess was a clever woman, but it would take a wiser head than hers to know where or when to draw that red line across the writings of our life.

On came the cart and the knot of men, and then suddenly John looked up and saw her looking at him with those dark eyes that did, indeed, seem at times as though they were the windows of her soul. He turned and said something to his companions and to the Zulu Mouti, who went on with the cart, and then came toward her smiling and with outstretched hand.

"How do you do, Jess?" he said. "So I have found you all right?"

She took his hand and answered, almost angrily, "Why have you come? Why did you leave Bessie and my uncle?"

"I came because I was sent, and also because I wished to. I wanted to get you back home before Pretoria was besieged."

"You must have been mad! How could you expect to get back? We shall both be shut up here together now."

"So it appears. Well, things might be worse," he added, cheerfully.

"I do not think that anything could be worse," she answered, with a stamp of her foot, and then, quite thrown off her balance, burst incontinently into a flood of tears.

John Niel was a very simple minded man, and it never struck him to attribute her grief to any other cause than anxiety at the state of affairs and at her incarceration for an indefinite period in a besieged town that ran daily risk of being taken vi et armis. Still he was a little hurt at the manner of his reception after his long and most perilous journey, which is not, perhaps, to be wondered at.

"Well, Jess," he said, "I think that you might speak a little more kindly to me, considering—considering all things. There, don't cry, they are all right at Mooifontein, and I dare say that we shall get back there somehow sometime or other. I had a nice business to get here at all, I can tell you."

She suddenly stopped weeping and smiled, her tears passing away like a summer storm. "How did you get through?" she asked. "Tell me all about it, Capt. Niel;" and accordingly he did.

She listened in silence while he sketched the chief events of his journey, and when he had done she spoke in quite a changed tone.

"It is very good and kind of you to have risked your life like this for me. Only I wonder that you did not all of you see that it would be of no use. We shall both be shut up here together now, that is all, and that will be very sad for you and Bessie."

"Oh. So you have heard of our engagement?" he said.

"Yes, I got Bessie's letter about a couple of hours ago, and I congratulate you both very much. I think that you will have the sweetest and loveliest wife in South Africa, Capt. Niel; and I think that Bessie will have a husband any woman might be proud of;" and she half bowed and half courtesied to him as she said it, with a graceful little air of dignity that was very taking.

"Thank you," he said, simply; "yes, I think I am a very lucky fellow."

"And now," she said, "we had better go and see about the cart. You must be very tired and hungry;" and they started.

A few minutes' walk brought them to the cart, which Mouti had outspanned close to Mrs. Neville's wagon, where Jess and her friends were living, and the first person they saw was Mrs. Neville herself. She was a good, motherly, colonial woman, accustomed to a rough life, and not easily disturbed by an emergency like the present.

"My goodness, Capt. Niel!" she cried, as soon as Jess had introduced him. "Well, you are plucky to have forced your way through all those horrid Boers! I am sure I wonder that they did not shoot you or beat you to death with sjambocks, the brutes. Not that there is much use in your coming, for you will never be able to get Jess back till Sir George Colley relieves us, and that can't be for two months, they say. Well, there is one thing, Jess will be able to sleep in the cart now, and you can get one of the patrol tents and sleep alongside. It won't be quite proper, perhaps, but in these times we can't stop to consider propriety. There, there, you go off to the governor. He will be glad enough to see you, I'll be bound. I saw him at the other end of the camp, there, five minutes ago, and we will have the cart arranged and see all about it."

Thus adjured, John departed, and when he returned half an hour afterward, having told his eventful tale, which did not, however, convey any information of general value, he was rejoiced to find the process of "getting things straight" was in good progress. What was better still, Jess had fried him a beefsteak over the camp fire, and was now employed in serving it on a little table by the wagon. He sat down on a camp stool and ate his meal heartily enough, while Jess waited on him and Mrs. Neville chattered away.

"By the way," she said, "Jess tells me you are going to marry her sister. Well, I wish you joy. A man wants a wife in a country like this. It isn't like England, where in five cases out of six he might as well go and cut his throat as get married. It saves him money here, and children are a blessing, as nature meant them to be, and not a burden, as civilization has made them. Lord, how my tongue does run on! It isn't delicate to talk about children when you have only been engaged a couple of weeks; but, you see, that's what it all comes to after all. She's a pretty girl, Bessie, and a good one, too—I don't know her much—though she hasn't got the brains of Jess, here. That reminds me; as you are engaged to Bessie, of course you can look after Jess, and nobody will think anything of it. Ah! if you only knew what a place this is for talk, though their talk is pretty well scared out of them now, I'm thinking. My husband is coming round presently to the cart to help get Jess's bed into it. Lucky it's big. We are such a tight fit in that wagon that I shall be downright glad to see the last of the dear girl; though, of course, you'll both come and take your meals with us."

Jess heard all this [illegible] not well insist upon stopping in the wagon; it would be asking too much; and, besides, she had had one night in the wagon, and that was quite enough for her. Once she suggested that she would see if she could not get the nuns to take her in at the convent, but Mrs. Neville instantly suppressed the notion.

"Nuns!" she said, "nonsense. When your own brother in law—at least he will be your brother in law if the Boers don't make an end of us all—is here to take care of you; don't talk about going to a parcel of nuns. It will be as much as they can do to look after themselves, I'll be bound."

As for John, he ate his steak and said nothing. The arrangement seemed a very proper one to him.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE TWELFTH OF FEBRUARY.

John soon settled down into the routine of camp life in Pretoria, which, after one once got accustomed to it, was not so disagreeable as might have been expected, and possessed, at any rate, the merit of novelty. Although he was an officer of the army, John preferred, on the whole, having several horses to ride, and, his services not being otherwise required, he made up his mind to enroll himself in the corps of mounted volunteers known as the Pretoria carbineers, in the humble capacity of a sergeant, and this he obtained leave to do from the officer commanding the troops. He was an active man, and his duties in connection with the corps kept him fully employed during most of the day, and sometimes, when there was outpost duty to be done, during a good part of the night too. For the rest, whenever he got back to the cart—by which he had stipulated he should be allowed to sleep in order to protect Jess in case of any danger—he always found her ready to greet him, and every little preparation made for his comfort that was possible under the circumstances. Indeed, as time went on they found it more convenient to set up their own little mess instead of sharing that of their friends, and so they used every day to sit down to breakfast and dine together at a little table rigged up out of a packing case, and placed under an extempo.ary tent, all for the world like a young couple picnicking on their honeymoon. Of course the whole thing was very irksome in a way, but it is not to be denied that it had a charm of its own. To begin with, Jess, when once one got thoroughly to know her, was one of the most delightful companions to a man like John Niel that it was possible to meet with. Never, till this long tete a tete at Pretoria, had he guessed how powerful and original was her mind, or how witty she could be when she liked. There was a fund of dry and suggestive humor about her which, although it would no more bear being written down than champagne will bear standing in a tumbler, was very pleasant to listen to, more especially as John soon discovered that he was the only person so privileged. Her friends and relations had never suspected that Jess was humorous. Another thing that struck him about her, as time went on, was that she was growing quite handsome. She had been very pale and thin when he reached Pretoria, but before a month was over she had got, comparatively speaking, stout, which was an enormous gain to her appearance. Her pale face, too, gathered a faint tinge of color, that came and went capriciously, like starlight on the water, and her beautiful eyes grew deeper and more beautiful than ever.

"Who would ever have thought that it was the same girl?" said Mrs. Neville to him, holding up her hands as she watched Jess solemnly surveying a half cooked mutton chop; "why, she used to be such a poor creature, and now she's quite a fine woman. And that with this life, too, which is wearing me to a shadow, and has half killed my dear daughter."

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order. Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Last year there 779 female students at the Russian Universities, 31 of whom were married. Physics and mathematics were the studies of 500, while 243 devoted themselves to philology. Many Russian girls also are students at the Swiss Universities.

An attempt on the part of Viau, the notorious ringleader of the recent revolt at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, to escape from the prison was discovered on Monday by the keepers just in time to prevent its being successful.

The Canadian Pacific Company are credited with the intention of securing the bonds to be issued for the building of the Red River Valley Railway.

"Some said, 'John, print it,' others said 'Not so,'
Some said, 'It might do good,' others said, 'No.'"

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

St. John's Church.

A strawberry festival will be held in the grounds of the church on Thursday 30th June. The Fire Brigade band and the Harmony Club, well known, will be in attendence.

LADIES' belts in straw, web, alligator and leather, all new designs. For belts call at TURNBULL'S.

Imperial Federation League.

A meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Imperial Federation League will be held in the Foresters' hall, opposite the Golden Lion, June 30 to-night, at eight o'clock. There will be a discussion on commercial union and inter-imperial trade. Those wishing to become members are invited to be present. 2d149

Prize Competition.

The competition for the prize of ten dollars, given by Mr. Stevenson, M.P., to the best writer at the Collegiate Institute, was held yesterday, Mr. D. J. B. Sawyer, of the Peterborough Business College, acting as judge. The prize was awarded to J. Anderson and D. J. Ryan, who are equal in standing, each of whom will therefore receive a $5 gold piece.

Anniversary and Social.

The Rev. Principal Grant, D. D., will conduct the anniversary services in St. Andrew's Church next Sabbath. On Monday evening the ladies will hold a fruit social at 8 o'clock. Visitors may confidently expect a good programme: Stirring addresses, choice music by the choir, grand organ solos and a delicious cooler-Jersey cream. Admission, a silver collection t the door. Refreshments extra. 3d151-1w26

Royal Military College.

The closing exercises of the Royal Military College, Kingston, took place on Wednesday. Among those who graduated was Company Colour Sergeant H. A. Morrow (son of Mr. R. A. Morrow), who was awarded the sword for good conduct and discipline. He is recommended for a commission in the infantry of the Imperial army. Cadet Rogers (son of Col. H. C. Rogers) stood first in his class (second year) in Military History.

McIntyre and Mercer.

On Wednesday Messrs. J. E. McIntyre and J. Mercer left town to take part in the regatta at Tweed in connection with Father Flemming's picnic. In the double scull contest, in which they entered, they had two opponents. The first half of the mile and a half course was a tight pull among the three, but the home stretch was easy, McIntyre and Mercer winning by about four lengths, and taking the handsome prize. Quite a number of people from town were present at the picnic.

Personal.

The Montreal Witness has the following paragraph as to well deserved honor shown to a gentleman who has many friends in Peterborough:—"Mr. D. A. O'Sullivan, of the Ontario Bar, received the degree of Doctor of Law from Laval University, at the public session in Quebec, on Monday ast In acknowledging the honor, Mr. O'Sullivan said he hoped that the degree was a step towards more friendly recognition of a neighboring Province, and that it should be the beginning of a closer union between the two great families of the Canadian people."

The name of Dr. A. E. Yelland, is among the registrations of Canadians in London during the week ening June 16th."

THE GREAT DEMONSTRATION.

Prospects Bright for an Immense Gathering of Oddfellows.

The committee in charge of making arrangements for the great meeting of Oddfellows which takes place in Peterborough in August, together with the numerous sub-committees, are going energetically on with their work. Success has been met with wherever they have directed their efforts.

The exceptionally low railway rates give promise of bringing immense crowds to Peterborough during the demonstration. From Montreal to London the Oddfellows are booming the demonstration, and the August meeting here will without doubt be one of the greatest that has yet been held in Canada.

The Grand Encampment will meet on August 9th, and through the courtesy of the County Council will hold their sessions in the Court House. They will get through their business in one day and will give place to the Grand Lodge, which will hold its sessions up to August 12th. On the 10th the Grand Lodge will meet pro forma and will then adjourn to allow the representatives to participate in the festivities of the day. The Cantons Militant will meet in the Central Park and at two o'clock will commence the march. This will be a brilliant pageant. Dressed in uniforms of unrivalled richness the Militant members of the order will go through the drill, which is of itself a marvel. Mr. McNeil is receiving acceptances every day almost to the invitations issued. Already the Encampments from Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto London, and Newmarket have decided to participate. These will all be accompanied by brass bands except Montreal, which will be accompanied by pipers in full Highland costume.

The Ottawa Free Press says: "The Canton Outaouas No. 9 mustered in full strength last night and were put through their facings by Captain James Grant, and Lieut. J. R. Hooper. Every thing appears to be booming with this Canton, and their friends believe that they will be successful in bringing home one of the beautiful banners which will be offered for competition at the grand demonstration in Peterborough in August. They drill again to-morrow night and will continue to drill twice a week until the 9th of August when they [illegible] Peterborough."

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Writing.

Mr. Stevenson, Chairman of the Board o Education, presented, on Tuesday, a ten dollar gold piece for competition among the penmen of the Collegiate Institute. On Wednesday the trial test came off, Mr. Bannel Sawyer acting as judge. Various tests were made, after which it was decided to award the prize jointly to Mr. Dennis Ryan, of the 4th Form, and Mr. John Anderson, of the 3rd Form. These two will, therefore, be presented with a $5 gold piece each. Messrs. Dumble and Stevenson are to be commended for their liberality in presenting the prizes. If the citizens would follow this good example it would tend not a little to stimulate the pupils to greater effort.

FOR harvest mitts at bed-rock prices, call at TURNBULL'S.

The Weather.

During this heated term people are anxiously on the look out for drinkables. The demand is sharp and takes different shapes and colors. Some take refuge in "soda water," some "vulgah" people regale themselves in the red rosy picnic lemonade, but everybody who wants something really nice for the warm weather should go to Elliott & Tierney's and order some of Gurd's Apple Nectar, or Gurd's Seltzer Water, or Gurd's Champagne Cider, or Gurd's Appolinaris Water. 1d151

OUR CATTLE SHUT OUT.

COMMERCIAL union would place the cattle trade of Canada on the same footing as that of the States. Cattle from the latter country are not allowed into Great British unless slaughtered, which means a considerable difference in the price between that and live animals, and for this privilege Canadians have to thank Sir Charles Tupper who took such a great interest in having the restriction on Canadian cattle removed. The value of cattle exported from Canada to Great Britain last year was fifteen million dollars. With commercial union this trade would be lost.—Orillia Packet.

FOOLISH ARGUMENT.

The Globe's labored argument to the effect that upon all American goods coming into Canada the consumer pays the duty, but that upon Canadian goods going into the United States the producer pays the duty, is so self-destructive that its chief feature is the effrontery of the writers who put it forward. In its efforts to prove that a higher tariff would give us free trade the Globe insults the intelligence of everybody outside of its own editorial rooms.—Toronto World (Indep.)

THE QUEEN'S COUNTY CASE.

When, in discussing the "Queen's County muddle" on Saturday the Mail states that the Government supported Mr. Baird in his claim to that seat, it writes itself down guilty of an unwarrantable misstatement of fact. What the Government did was to insist that as the jurisdiction in election cases had been vested in the courts the Queen's County case should not be made an exception to the rule. What the Reform party did was to refuse to appeal to the courts—for this simple reason, that they needed a "grievance" a great deal more than they did a supporter in the House.—Toronto World (Ind.)

IMPORTANT!

AT the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

OUR STOCK EXPORTS.

Shall they be Subject to the Same Disqualifications as our Neighbors?

A point which cattle feeders should keep in view is this:—That it frequently occurs that the landing of American cattle at British ports is forbidden because of the diseases which they so often contract upon the ravines of the southwest. Upon such occasions the Canadian Government have been only able to secure exemption for our cattle by showing that all the stock shipped from Montreal was free from any taint. Let both countries pool their shipments and this will be no longer possible. There can never be a good market for Canadian cattle in the United States. There may be a demand for Mr. Fuller's Jerseys and other fancy breeds, but not for the ordinary cattle of commerce, which are raised upon a thousand plains of the Union. Farmers and other stock raisers will do well to ponder these facts, which the Wimanites are always careful to suppress.—Toronto World.

GERMANY AND RUSSSIA.

Antagonistic Feeling—Rumours of War—Germany at a Disadvantage.

BERLIN, July 3.—The relations between German and Russia are becomming incomprehensible. While there is seeming concord bet ween the two courts, the war of extermination against everything German is ever increasing in Russia. This action on the part of Russia results in intense bitterness against that country in Berlin, where the leading journals counsel reprisals in self-defence. The semi-official Post says that in the event of a war with Germany, which many influential persons in Russia are striving to bring about, a stroke of the pen would suffice to deprive Germans of all their sinews of war in the shape of the milliards they have confided to the care of Russia for bonds.

Labor Riot.

CHICAGO, July 2.—A gang of non-union dock laborers engaged in loading the schooner St. Lawrence were set upon yesterday afternoon by a number of members of the Seamen's Union and a pitched battle ensued. The union men boarded the vessel, armed with clubs, and finally drove the laborers ashore. Mate John Gale, who with a heavy spink continued to resist, was overpowered and beaten to insensibility. Two fisters, named King and Hogan, were captured by the police. They were held on charges of assault with intent to kill. Gale's skull was crushed and he may die. Several of the non-unionists received bad bruises and cuts.

The Earl of Aberdeen in Missouri.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 2.—The Irish National League of this city tendered a reception to the Earl of Aberdeen, ex-Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who arrived here yesterday from the Texas panhandle. A scull memorial was presented to the Earl by President Fitzpatrick. Speeches were made, and the Earl spoke feelingly of the present struggle in Ireland for Home Rule.

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our systems. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT NORTHFIELD.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—Possibly some of your readers may be interested in hearing from this place (so well-known as the home of D. L. Moody), some account of the great gathering now in progress. It is called the College Students' Summer School, and Association encampment for Bible study. Mr. Moody is an ever busy man, and in the summer devotes his time to his varied work here. As your readers probably know, there is situated here a Seminary for girls, where they are prepared for Christian work of various kinds. The buildings consist of East Hall, (accommodation for 60 students), Marquand Hall, (80 students) and Stone Hall, the recitation hall of the institution, which Mr. Moody says was "sung up" by Mr. Sankey, as it was built out of the proceeds of the sale of hymn books. Mr. Jas. Talcott, of New York, is now erecting a library to cost $20,000, and another large dormitory is erected, but not yet occupied. All these buildings are magnificent affairs, perfect of their kind. The whole appearance of the buildings and grounds, situated as they are on the bank of the Connecticut River, is very fine. The grounds cover 250 acres. This girls' school has now two hundred and seventeen students and thirteen teachers.

On the opposite side of the river, three miles distant, is Mount Hermon, a similar institution for boys. This property consists of 400 acres. The buildings comprise four brick cottages, a large recitation hall, and a new dormitory called Crossley Hall, and the dining hall. Just now the boys and girls are away for the holidays and the buildings are utilized for the purpose of conferences. In August the general Conference of Christian Workers will be held. The opening session of the school was held on Thursday morning, June 30th. It was a consecration meeting conducted by Mr. Moody. A deeply spiritual tone pervaded the meeting, which will have its influence on the whole gathering. On Thursday evening another session was held, the first speaker being Professor Henry Drummond, of Edinburgh University, so well-known throughout the world by his book "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." His subject was, "Preparing for Life." Prof. Drummond is a young man, and is very genial. He sails for Canada before he returns home, and will go to Peterborough. The Rev. Dr. Breckins, of Louisville, Kentucky, was the next speaker, his theme being "Familiarity with the Bible," which he upheld in the strongest contempt for it. His strong common sense and the humorous illustrations he made use of, will make him a favorite at the school. On this subject (the Bible) Moody is, of course, thoroughly au fait, and he rattled on for half an hour, throwing out suggestions so thickly that the hundreds of pencils did not get them down in the note books quickly enough.

Ira D. Sankey is here and sings occasionally. The music is conducted by Prof. and Mrs. Towner. Mr. Towner is a fine tenor, and Mrs. Towner has a powerful but sweet alto voice. In duets especially they are captivating. A male choir has already been organized, and the Mount Hermon male choir is also present. So the singing is by no means the least interesting part of the proceedings. A number of prominent men are present to assist, among them being the Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia.

To-day, the birthday of our young Dominion, the Canadian and British delegates will celebrate by a meeting in the afternoon. A Union Jack floats above the trees at my tent door, where it will hold its position even on the great Fourth of July.

The afternoons are devoted to recreation, all study being discountenanced. Preparations have been made for swimming, boating, base ball, lawn tennis, foot ball, and other sports, which are naturally largely indulged in.

G. E. W.

Northfield, Mass., 1st July, 1887.

DUMMER.

COUNCIL MEETING.—Council met in Warsaw, on June 18th. All present. Minutes of last meeting read and signed. On motion, the Reeve was appointed an arbitrator under Chap. 27, 46 Vict. S. ct. 17, to negotiate with the parties interested in the construction of a drain in Warsaw as to the just proportions of the costs to be borne by the parties interested and the Council of the township respectively. The Clerk was instructed to give the necessary notices that it is the intention of Council, at a meeting to be held in Warsaw at 10 a. m. on Saturday the 20th of August next, to pass a bylaw to establish a road on lot 9, in the 11th con. according to a plan of said road by F. W. Wilkins Esq. P. L. S. The following orders were granted:—

H. A. Moore, Council grant to 4th Con. line	$ 50.00
Wm. Darling, part salary as Clerk	50.00
Wm. Darling, Refund A. L. Davis & Co's account	90

The following bylaws were passed. One to provide for the payment of money, and one to make appropriations for roads, and to appoint Commissioners for expending the same. The Council adjourned to Saturday the 20th day of August next.

A Formidable Competitor.

The arrival of passengers in New York twenty days from Yokohama, by the Canadian Pacific, must be far beyond the "record." Such despatch make the new line a very formidable competitor for the business of China and Japan with our own Pacific roads, and with the extremely leisurely steamer service that connects with them at San Francisco. It remains to be seen how much of this slackness has been due to the absence of competition, and how much, under the pressure of competition, the voyage can be shortened. The map scarcely indicates such a geographical advantage for the new route as to account for the reduction in time made over it. Even if the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Pacific were to be blocked for two months in the year, the gain while it was open would make their route the favorite while it was open for passengers and "fast freight." At any rate, the competition can hardly fail to be a good thing for travellers and shippers.—N. Y. Times.

JEWS IN POLAND.

LONDON, July 13.—A new Russion coercive measure directs Government employees in Poland to forward frequently to St. Petersburg completed lists of resident foreigners. Jews are not allowed to remain in St. Petersburg longer than a week, and are not allowed to enter corporations or academies.

THE ROYAL GUESTS.

LONDON, July 3.—During the Jubilee festivities the Queen entertained over 5,000 guests. The expense of e tertaining all the sovereigns and princes from abroad during the past two weeks is borne entirely by the Queen's privy purse and is estimated at $500,000, if not more.

LORD R. CHURCHILL'S VIEW.

LONDON, July 3.—In a speech, Lord Randolph Churchill deplored the result of the election in Spalding, but yet did not consider its import alarming. Perhaps, he said, the Liberal-Unionists had relied too much upon their strength in Parliament and t e great combination of their leading men. The Spalding election might prove a blessing in disguise, for if ground were lost anywhere, the Liberal-Unionists must make strenuous efforts to recover it.

UNDER SURVEILLANCE.

LONDON, July 3.—The Globe says detectives are watching night and day a number of persons suspected of belonging to a sworn band of dynamite skirmishers whose existence has been discovered in an English provincial town.

THE "TIMES" LIBEL SUIT.

LONDON, July 3.—Mr. Frank Hugh O'Donnell, in his suit against the Times for libel on account of its charge against him and other Irish leaders in its article entitled "Parnellism and Crime," will summon as witnesses Mr. Parnell, Mr. Dillon and Mr. Sexton.

IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 2.—In the House of Lords, last night, Lord Salisbury moved the omission of the purchase clauses in the Irish land bill, on the ground that they were irrelevant to the main object of the bill. Lord Spencer said he hoped the Government would not persist in omitting the clauses. He believed the clauses would be welcomed rather than opposed. Earl Cadogan intimated that the Government would not press the motion to omit the purchase clauses. The report of the bill was then agreed to and the committee rose to meet for Monday.

GORDON'S PAPERS.

LONDON, July 2.—Father Locatelli left Suakim to-day for Kartoum, taking the route via Berber. The object of his journey is to attempt to secure the release of Lupton Bey and to secure possession of the journals papers, etc., left by Gen. Gordon and known to be in the custody of El Mahdi's chief representative at Kartoum.

A GOOD SIGN.

LONDON, July 2.—Crown Prince Frederick William of Prussia, protracted his visit to the Crystal Palace grounds until eleven o'clock, and experienced no trouble whatever with his throat in consequence of his remaining so long in the night air.

LABOURERS' DEPUTATION.

LONDON, July 3.—Viscount Kilcoursie, ex-Vice-Chamberlain, and at present a Liberal member of the House of Commons for South Somersetshire, is arranging to send a deputation of English labourers to Ireland to investigate for themselves the condition of the Irish labourers and report the truth as the deputation find it to the labourers of Great Britain.

OUTRAGE BY MOONLIGHTERS.

DUBLIN, July 3.—Moonlighters last night made an attack upon the house of ex-Magistrate Daniel McDonnell, near Fieries. Mr. McDonnell was absent at the time. The miscreants warned Mrs. McDonnell to abandon the farm, and then set fire to the house and retired, promising to return.

MR. KILBRIDE ILL.

DUBLIN, July 3.—Mr. Kilbride, formerly a tenant on Lord Lansdowne's estates in Kerry, who accompanied Mr. Wm. O'Brien on his trip to Canada, is seriously ill at Athy.

THE CRIMES BILL.

LONDON, July 2.—In the House of Commons, last evening, Mr. Smith replying to Mr. Fowler, promised to meet the wishes of the members of the House if they thought it advisable to delay still further the third reading of the Crimes' Bill.

THE CROWN PRINCE.

LONDON, July 2.—A section of the growth last night removed from the throat of the German Crown Prince has been sent to Prof. Virchow of Berlin for examination. The latter has just made a thoroughly satisfactory report which has delighted the emperor and the prince.

ANXIOUS FOR A CROWN.

LONLON, July 2.—Prince Ferdinand says he will accept the Bulgarian throne if the Tobrango elects him. It is thought that all of the European powers except Russia would aquiesce in his election.

A COMMANDER MISSING.

MARSEILLES, July 2.—Commander Charles Le Strange of the British despatch boat Surprise, is missing. He was here awaiting the arrival of the Duke of Edinburgh, whom the Surprise was to carry to Malta. Last Wednesday Commander Le Strange visited the suburbs of Marseilles, and he has not been seen or heard from since.

MILITARY DUTY.

PARIS, July 3.—The Chamber of Deputies has agreed that youths of 20, liable under the present laws to military duty, may upon request have the date of their entry postponed a year and possibly two years, if the time is required for the completion of studies, apprenticeship, etc. A third and even fourth year may be allowed university students, students of seminaries, pupils of Catholic colleges and those of certain technical schools.

WATER SCARCE.

LONDON, July 3.—There is a scarcity of water in Belfast in consequence of the drouth and work in the mills is being partly stopped.

STRIKERS IMPRISONED.

LONDON, July 3.—The strike among the Bolton factory hands has reached an acute phase. The men who went to Bolton to take the places of the strikers quit work in a body yesterday, and one firm closed its mills because of the rioting against it, and threw 1,500 hands out of work. None of these were connected with the strikers. Yesterday ten rioters were sent to prison for a month.

A GLADSTONIAN VICTORY.

LONDON, July 3.—In the Parliamentary election to fill the vacancy in the Spalding division of Lincolnshire, the Gladstonians have gained a seat. Their candidate, Mr Halloy Stewart, defeated Mr. Tyson, the Conservative and Liberal-Unionist nominee, by 5,110 to 4,363. In the last election Mr. Stewart was defeated by Mr. Finch-Hatton, Conservative, by a majority of 288. In the present election the total vote was 639 greater than in the last election.

THE DUBLIN LORD MAYOR.

DUBLIN, July 3.—Messrs. Sexton, McDonald, Kennedy and Mayne attended the meeting in the Phœnix Park to-day, to protest against the exclusion of Mr. Dillon from the Lord Mayoralty of Dublin. Mr. Sexton received the unanimous support o the meeting. In a speech he declared that he had acted in accordance with Mr. Parnell's wishes, and he trusted that he would not be defeated by the Parnellites.

MR. MICHAEL DAVITT.

DUBLIN, July 3.—Mr. Michael Davitt has started to stump Scotland on the Irish question. He will afterwards go on a stumping tour through London and the North of England.

THE GHILZAIS DEFEATED.

SIMLA, July 3.—Advices from Afghanistan confirm the reports of two defeats of the Ghilzais recently with heavy losses. The first defeat was on June 13 and the second on the 16th.

COLLECTORS MOBBED.

MADRID, July 3.—In Valencia yesterday the houses of the Octroi collectors were attacked and destroyed by a mob of the inhabitants of the town, who protested against the payment of taxes. The disturbed district is now occupied by troops.

BOULANGER'S HOLIDAY.

PARIS, July 2.—Gen. Boulanger asked an extension of his holiday before joining the army corps to the command of which he has just been appointed. The Government granted him an extension only until the 10th. The General remains in Paris.

EVICTIONS AT LIMERICK.

DUBLIN, July 3.—At a sheriff's sale in Limerick yesterday, Mr. Hutchens, a chancery receiver, bought in two farms from which tenants had been evicted. The purchase incensed the friends of the evictees, and they attempted to mob Mr. Hutchens. He fled and took refuge in a police station, whither the crowd followed him and refused to disperse. The police then charged the crowd and made five arrests.

SCOTLAND.

The Aberdeen Chamber of Commerce is agitating for improved postal communications with India and China.

Four grocers in Dundee have been fined for selling temperance drinks containing 20.6 per cent alcohol.

In Glasgow 50,000 poor children were given a holiday fete on Jubilee day, being taken to Rothsay by fourteen steamers.

The crofters at Rosehall on the Scottish Provident Institution have got their rents reduced from 50 to 70 per cent., owing to a valuation by Mr. Gorden, Elgin.

Scotland street tunnel has been leased from the North British Railway Company, and is being utilized for mushroom culture. Over two hundred yards of mushroom beds have been planted.

On June 6th Kenneth Maclean, aged five years, fell over the cliff at Ness Laws. His cries were heard, and at great risk of his life a man descended the rock and found the child floating on the water alive.

There is a row in Old Machar Parochial Board about the large quantity of liquor consumed by members of the committee. A motion that no intoxicating liquors be supplied to them was lost by 18 votes to 13.

In connection with the unveiling of the monument of King Alexander III. at Kinghorn, Fifeshire, on the 19th of July, the freedom of the burgh is to be conferred upon Lord Elgin and Mr. William Nelson, Edinburgh.

The Rev. Mr. Macdonald, Rosskeen, was boycotted when preaching at Alness on the 5th of June, because of his being instrumental in dismissing Mr. D. Macrae, teacher. When the congregation found Mr. Macdonald was to preach all left except two.

An anti-sugar bounty demonstration took place at Greenock on the 7th June. About thirty carters on horseback paraded the streets, accompanied by instrumental bands. In the evening a meeting was held in the Town Hall. Mr. T. Carmichael presided.

The small farmers and crofters in the Murkle district have adopted a "Plan of Campaign" for themselves, the principal feature of which is that landlords are to be paid not in money, but in kind, valued at the rates current when the present rents were fixed.

SOUTH DOURO.

From Our Own Correspondent.

INSPECTING THE TRENT VALLEY.—Mr. Thos Russel celebrated Dominion Day by paying a visit to Burleigh, to inspect the Trent Valley Works there. He went up in the meat waggon, and returned in the evening giving a highly satisfactory report. He hopes to see the day when ships of the bulk of the Great Eastern will pass through the canal.

PROMOTION EXAMINATION.—The promotion examination at the school house of school section No. 4, Douro, was held on Thursday, June 30th. The pupils acquitted themselves so as to reflect much credit on Miss Regan, the teacher. It is to be regretted that the trustees and parents take so little interest in the school, as on the day of the examination, though the intimation was general, only flue, besides pupils and teacher were in attendance. Mr. Moloney, the only trustee present, complimented Miss Regan upon the good order preserved in the school and the efficiency of her teaching, remarking before resuming his seat, that a good many parents regarded the school as a place where their children might be stowed away so as to relieve them of looking after them, instead of as a place where the foundations of their lives were laid.

IMPERIAL COMMERCE.

We have noticed lately, in several of the annexationist journals, statements that the friends of Imperial federation advocate an arrangement by which the Mother Country should admit food imports free from Canada (and other colonies) while placing a duty on similar imports from foreign countries, Canada in return admitting British manufactured goods free of duty.

This is completely at variance with the facts. The Imperial Federation League has for one of its fundamental principles that there shall be no interference with the right of the different portions of the Empire to frame their own tariffs, to protect their own interests—that there shall be no zollverein with a commoh tariff fixed by the whole body. In the Canadian branch of the League a proposal has been made and warmly advocated, though pending further consideration and discussion it has not been authoritatively adopted even as a suggestion by the organized body, that Canada, while retaining its protective duties, should impose an additional five or ten per cent. on all foreign imports, but not on imports from other parts of the Empire, while the Mother Country in return should impose a corresponding five or ten per cent. duty on foreign imports, while still admitting free of duty the products of Canada and other colonies and dependencies.

The advocates of this plan aver that it would consolidate and strengthen the whole Empire and render it and all its parts almost entirely independent of the rest of the world. They argue that Canada would still protect, as at present, her own manufactures, continuing to make at home such goods as she found expedient,, while for such articles as she imported she would give her fellow countrymen a preference over foreigners. They also point out that the mother country would not thereby abandon her policy of not taxing imported food, as Canada and other parts of the Empire would afford ample supplies and sufficient competition.

This suggested plan is something very different from the asserted proposals that Great Britain should tax food and Canada cease to protect her own industries. It is a grand idea. Under some such system the British Empire and its constituent parts would occupy a commanding position in the world, and patriotic men may well aim at attaining such a result. Details would no doubt have to be modified and the consent of the leading portions of the Empire would have to be obtained to make it effective, but we cannot say that it is not feasible or that it would not be beneficial. It is an idea conceived on lines utterly opposed to that advocated by the commercial annexationists that we should discriminate against our fellow countrymen in other parts of the Empire, and in favour of foreigners. The vast majority of patriotic Canadians will greatly prefer that any discrimination should be mutual within the Empire of which we are a constituent part.

GIVE AND TAKE.

In its new role of a fomenter of disintegration of our Dominion, the Mail says that in spite of our efforts to establish inter-provincial trade the Eastern Provinces are yearning for commercial relations with the States, and that the Manitobans are demanding unrestricted railway communication with the Territories to the south of them. We have good reason to doubt that the feeling attributed to these Provinces is either general or lasting. There are some greedy people who would not be contented unless they possessed the whole earth. This class in the Maritime Provinces are quite willing to accept the benefits conferred by the policy of the Dominion, the improved communications by the Intercolonial and the C.P.R. and the extended market in the other Provinces for their coal, iron, fish and manufactures, but they wish at the same time to have the incompatible liberty of free trade with New England. So with the same class in Manitoba; they accept, without any gratitude, the expenditure of the more populous parts of the Dominion to give them means of communication and to open up their lands by means of the C. P. R., to purchase their territory, and to create a flourishing, if young, Province out of what was previously a mere preserve for trappers, red Indians and fur-bearing animals, but they wish at the same time to be free to divert traffic and establish commercial relations for the benefit of foreigners.

These greedy individuals, some politicians who are disappointed at having their services rejected by the people of Canada and those who are led away by the specious grumbling of these interested men, are raising an apparently formidable clamour. But it will be found that the majority of the people remain sound, that they will not persist in claiming every benefit while repudiating any disadvantage of a general policy, and that they will soon come to see, if they do not already, that they are sharing in the benefits of a wise administration that is building up the whole Dominion.

At a meeting of the Building Committee of the Edinburgh Public Library Committee, Lord Provost Clark presiding, it was arranged that the foundation stone of the Library should be laid by Mr. Andrew Carnegie on the afternoon of Saturday, 9th July.

THE IMMORTALS.

Some souls there are too good for these brief years
Which into dark oblivion swiftly fade,—
Children of heaven, that thro' its portal strayed,
And wandered, seeking flowers among the spheres.
Weep not when they are gone, nor let thy tears
Bring rain into the sunshine that they made.
They came, and went; and bright the way appears
Where they passed from our vision, unafraid.
Such souls think not of death (there is no death,
For we are souls, and souls can never die),
Straight on and on they go, with faces high
And songs triumphant to the latest breath.
Lo! they have vanished—they have crossed our shore,
Singing, and gathering flowers, forevermore!
—James Buckham in Frank Leslie's.

A "Fake" of Young Hunters.

A few years ago several young men of Galt leased a lake in this county and went into the business of hunting for the market. They were quite successful, and finally struck a scheme which would have glutted the wild game market of the world if rival hunters had not interfered. One morning two of the hunters were coming to the city with a wagon load of game and had just crossed the railroad track when they discovered five dead ducks lying beside the track. "I wonder what killed those ducks?" asked the young hunter. "The telegraph wires, of course," replied his companion. "It very frequently happens that ducks, quail, and other birds which are rapid on the wing are killed by flying hard against the wires." "If that is true," said the first speaker, "why wouldn't it be a good idea to stretch lines of wires across our lake?"

It was agreed that the scheme should be given a trial. A block and tackle were secured, and seven lines of wire, 100 feet apart, were drawn across the lake. The young men were up bright and early next morning to see what success they had. They took a boat, went out on the lake, and picked up 107 dead ducks. The hunters laid aside their guns, quit purchasing ammunition, and every morning for more than four weeks they secured a boat load of ducks brought down by the small wires. The ducks would come into the lake like a shot, as darkness approached, dive down toward the water with terrific speed, and would be mowed down by the wires by scores. Finally older professional hunters became aware of the "fake" of the young men, cut the wires, and by threats prevented them from being again erected.—Sacramento Bee.

What "Preferred Stock" Means.

In financial matters names often have great effect. A few years ago many ignorant people bought bonds of western railroads simply because the name "bond" implied to their minds that there was a good margin of property owned by the corporation besides the amount for which it gave the bond. This mode of deceiving the ignorant has now lost its efficacy as regards western corporations, but in this state we have taken such pains to regulate the issue of stocks and bonds that the name "bond" still gives a sense of security, and so, too, does the name preferred stock. The latter name implies that the company has made a small portion of its stock more desirable than the larger portion, which remains as common stock.

As stock can be issued in Massachusetts only for the amount of money really paid into the treasury, if a small portion of the stock so issued is in some way made better than the large remainder, the fair supposition is that it is worth more than par. But if 98 per cent. of the stock of the corporation is made preferred, the name is likely to mislead, and the state should not sanction such an attempt at deception. But, still further, if by limiting the amount of dividend that the preferred can receive, at the same time that 98 per cent. of the stock is made preferred, the common stock is made very valuable per share, it is obvious that the name preferred is misapplied. Instead of being preferred stock it should be called limited stock. The stock really has all the disadvantages and none of the advantages of a bond.—Boston Herald.

Necessity of Careful Revision.

Careful revision of what you have written is always essential, and the work can best be revised after a lapse of time. Men who write for daily papers, however, are generally not allowed a month or a year in which to perfect their work. They must write at midnight for the morning paper, and the time for revision is brief. Even so, the man who allows his copy to go to the news editor without having read it through does himself and his employer an injustice, and acquires a careless habit of composition that cannot fail to do him harm. A skillful editor can generally improve any hastily written article; but the work he does is mechanical, and, as a rule, the writer of the article himself can do it better. It is his duty, and he should regard it as his privilege, to make his work as nearly complete as he can before he gives it to another. You can always care better for your own baby than you can for another's child, and the experience you get makes you more skillful still.—"W. H. H." in The Writer.

The Primrose Myth.

James Payn reveals the false basis on which the Primrose league (sacred to the memory of Beaconsfield) was founded. He says: "The origin of the Primrose league, by the by, arose from a mistake. To Lord Beaconsfield's burial the queen contributed a huge wreath of primroses with the inscription on them, 'His favorite flower.' In the royal mind 'His' always signifies something belonging to the prince consort, and it was so in this case, but the fashionable world jumped to the conclusion that she meant the late premier, and at once began to remember how passionately fond he used to be of primroses. There is one mention of them in his works, and I believe only one, where a noble is made to say that he has a respect for primroses, because he has heard that at a pinch one can make a salad of them."—The Independent.

Classical, but Obscure.

To Charles Sumner in Europe, Longfellow wrote from his Cambridge home in January of 1850: "Lowell has lately written in The Atlantic a couple of very clever articles on Shakespeare. Here is a recondite joke from one of its pages: 'To every commentator who has wantonly tampered with the text, or obscured it with his inky cloud of paraphrase, we feel inclined to apply the quadrisyllabic name of the brother of Agis, king of Sparta.' Felton was the first to find out the joke, and to remember or discover that this name was Eudamidas!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

Gathering Dandelion Leaves.

"Do you see that girl in the grass by the big oak?" asked a Union park policeman, pointing to a mite of a thing in a tattered gown. "She's digging her dinner, poor thing. She comes here every morning about this time and asks permission to cut dandelion leaves. She clips a basketful of the weed before 11 o'clock, and then she toddles over to her home on Austin avenue. It isn't an unpalatable dish—these dandelion leaves—but I should think the poor thing would get tired of them. She tells me her mother boils them and serves them as greens."—Chicago Herald.

A Sinking Ship.

The wonderful British navy is as prolific in subjects for scandal as ever. One newspaper says one of the new vessels, no sooner left the dockyard hands with the intention of proceeding on a voyage than a fortunate discovery proved her to be quietly sinking. Such a discreditable mishap has just occurred to the Langrail of Plymouth, after £54,858 had been spent in building her. Her sister ship Curlew cut a sorry figure off the same port under similar circumstances a short time ago.—Chicago Tribune.

True Friendship.

Mr. Jefferson Davis writes to a friend that true friendship is always founded on true worth, and that a quaint old Mississippian used to say, "I think my friends are just as good as any other people's friends."—Harper's Bazar

Superiority of the Cowboy's Method.

The riding in the Wild West show has impressed several Englishmen by its grace and ease, due to the straight legs which the Americans carry, instead of the shortened stirrups and wellbent knees of English horsemen. Letters are printed in The Times proclaiming the superiority of the American fashion over the English method of "riding with the knees in the mouth." It would be hard on American dudes if the English fashion should change just after they have painfully acquired it.—Boston Transcript.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

Meanwhile as John reflected, the force to which he was attached was moving into action, and he soon found it necessary to come down to the unpleasantly practical details of Boer warfare. More particularly did this come home to his mind when, shortly afterward, the man next to him was shot dead, and a little later he himself was slightly wounded by a bullet which passed between his saddle and his thigh. Into the details of the fight that ensued it is not necessary to enter here. They were, if anything, more discreditable than most of the episodes of that unhappy war, in which the holding of Potchefstroom, Lydenburg, Rustenburg and Wakkerstroom are the only bright spots. Suffice it to say that they ended in something very like an utter rout at the hands of a much inferior force, and that, a few hours after he had started, John found himself on the return road to Pretoria, with a severely wounded man behind his saddle (the ambulance being left in the hands of the Boers), who, as they went painfully along, mingled curses of shame and fury with his own. Meanwhile exaggerated accounts of what had happened had got into the town, and, among other things, it was said that Capt. Niel had been shot dead. One man who came in stated that he saw him fall, and that he was shot through the head. This Mrs. Neville heard with her own ears, and, greatly shocked, started to communicate the intelligence to Jess.

As soon as it was daylight Jess had, as was customary with her, gone over to the little house which she and John occupied, "The Palatial," as it was ironically called, and settled herself there for the day. First she tried to work and could not, so she took a book that she had brought with her and began to read, but it was a failure also. Her eyes would wander from the page, and her ears kept straining to catch the distant booming of the big guns that came from time to time floating across the hills. The fact of the matter was that the poor girl was the victim of a presentiment that something was going to happen to John. Most people of imaginative mind have suffered from this kind of thing at one time or other in their lives, and have lived to see the folly of it; and, indeed, there was more in the circumstances of the present case to excuse the indulgence in the luxury of presentiments than is usual. Indeed, as it happened, she was not far out—only a sixteenth of an inch or so—for John was very nearly killed.

Now, while Jess in camp Mrs. Neville made her way across to "The Palatial," where she knew the girl sat, crying as she went at the thought of the news that she had to communicate, for the good soul had grown very fond of John Niel. Jess, with that acute sense of hearing that often accompanies nervous excitement, caught the sound of the little gate at the bottom of the garden almost before her visitor had got through it and ran round the corner of the house to see who it was.

One glance at Mrs. Neville's tear stained face was enough for her. She knew what was coming, and clasped at one of the young blue gum trees that grew along the path to prevent herself from falling.

"What is it?" she said, faintly; "is he dead?"

"Yes, my dear, yes; shot through the head, they say."

Jess made no answer, but clung to the sapling, feeling as though she were going to die herself, and faintly hoping that she might do so. Her eyes wandered vaguely from the face of the messenger of evil, first up to the sky, then down to the cropped and trodden veldt. Past the gate of "The Palatial" garden ran a road, which, as it happened, was a short cut from the scene of the fight, and down this road came four Kaffirs and half castes, bearing something on a stretcher, with three or four carbineers riding behind. A coat was thrown over the face of the form on the stretcher, but the legs were visible. They were booted and spurred, and the feet fell apart in that peculiarly lax and helpless way of which there is no possibility of mistaking the meaning.

"Look!" she said, pointing.

"Ah, poor man, poor man!" said Mrs. Neville, "they are bringing him here to lay him out."

Then Jess' beautiful eyes closed, and down she went with the bending tree. Presently the sapling snapped, and she fell senseless with a little cry, and as she did so the men with the corpse passed on.

Two minutes afterward, John Niel, having heard the rumor of his own death on arrival at the camp, and greatly fearing lest it should have got to Jess' ears, came cantering hurriedly across, and dismounting as well as his wound would allow, limped up the garden path.

"Great heavens, Capt. Niel!" said Mrs. Neville, looking up; "why, we thought that you were dead!"

"And that is what you have been telling her, I suppose," he said, sternly, glancing at the pale and deathlike face; "you might have waited till you were sure. Poor girl! it must have given her a turn," and stooping down, he got his arms under her, and lifting her with some difficulty, limped off to the house, where he laid her down upon the table, and, assisted by Mrs. Neville, began to do all in his power to revive her. So obstinate was her faint, however, that their efforts were unavailing, and at last Mrs. Neville started off to the camp to get some brandy, leaving him to go on rubbing her hands and sprinkling water on her face.

The good lady had not been gone more than two or three minutes when Jess suddenly opened her eyes and sat up, and then slipped her feet to the ground. Her eyes fell upon John and dilated with wonder, and he thought that she was going to faint again, for even her lips blanched, and she began to shake and tremble all over in the extremity of her agitation.

"Jess, Jess," he said, "for God's sake don't look like that, you frighten me!"

"I thought you were—I thought you were —" she said, slowly, and then suddenly burst into a passion of tears and fell forward upon his breast and lay there sobbing her heart out, her brown curls resting against his face.

It was an awkward position and a most moving one. John was only a man, and the spectacle of this strange woman, to whom he had lately grown so much attached, plunged into intense emotion, awakened, apparently, by anxiety about his fate, stirred him deeply, as it would have stirred anybody. Indeed, it struck some chord in him for which he could not quite account, and its echoes charmed and yet frightened him. What did it mean?

"Jess, dear Jess, pray stop; I can't bear to see you cry so."

She lifted her head from his shoulder and stood looking at him, her hand resting on the table behind her. Her face was wet with tears and looked like a dew washed lily, and her beautiful eyes were alight with a flame that he had never seen in the eyes of woman before. She said nothing, but her whole face was more eloquent than any words, for there are times when the features can convey a message in a language of their own that is more subtle than any tongue we talk. There she stood, her breast heaving with emotion as the sea heaves when the fierceness of the storm has passed—a very incarnation of the intensest love of woman. And as she stood something seemed to pass before her eyes and blind her, and a spirit took possession of her that absorbed all her doubts and fears, and she gave way to a force that was of her and yet compelled her, as, when the wind blows, the sails compel a ship. And then, for the first time, where her love was concerned, she put out all her strength. She knew, and had always known, that she could master him, and force him to regard her as she regarded him, did she but choose. How she knew it she could not say, but so it was. And now she yielded to an overmastering impulse and chose. She said nothing, she did not even move, she only looked at him.

"Why were you in such a fright about me?" he stammered.

She did not answer, but kept her eyes upon his face, and it seemed to John as though power flowed from them; for, as she looked, he felt the change come. Everything melted away before the almost spiritual intensity of her gaze. Bessie, honor, his engagement—all were forgotten; the smouldering embers broke into flame, and he knew that he loved this woman as he had never loved any living creature before—that he loved her even as she loved him. Strong man as he was he shook like a leaf before her.

"Jess," he said, hoarsely, "God forgive me! I love you!" and he bent forward to kiss her.

She lifted her face toward him, then suddenly changed her mind, and laid her hand upon his breast.

"You forget," she said, almost solemnly, "you are going to marry Bessie."

Overpowered by a deep sense of shame, and by another sense of the deep calamity that had overtaken him John turned and limped from the house.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AND AFTER.

In front of the door of "The Palatial" was a round flower bed filled with weeds and flowers mixed up together like the good and evil in the heart of man, and to the right hand side of this bed stood an old wooden chair with the back off. No sooner had John got outside the door of the cottage than he became sensible that, what between one thing and another—weariness, loss of blood from his wound, and intense mental emotion—if he did not sit down somewhere pretty quickly he should follow the example set by Jess and faint straight away. Accordingly he made for the old chair and perched himself on it with gratitude. Presently he saw Mrs. Neville coming steaming along the path with a bottle of brandy in her hand.

"Ah!" he thought to himself, "that will just come in handy for me. If I don't have a glass of brandy soon I shall roll off this infernal chair—I am sure of it."

"Where is Jess?" panted Mrs. Neville.

"In there," he said; "she has recovered. It would have been better for us both if she hadn't," he added to himself.

"Why, bless me, Capt. Niel, how queer you look!" said Mrs. Neville, fanning herself with her hat," and there is such a row going on at the camp there; the volunteers swear that they will attack the military for deserting them, and I don't know what all; and they simply wouldn't believe me when I said you were not shot. Why, I never! Look! your boot is full of blood! So you were hit after all."

"Might I trouble you to give me some brandy, Mrs. Neville?" said John, faintly.

She filled a glass she had brought with her half full of water from a little irrigation furrow that ran down from the main sluit by the road, and then topped it up with brandy. He drank it, and felt decidedly better.

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Neville, "there are a pair of you now. You should just have seen that girl go down when she saw the body coming along the road! I made sure that it was you; but it wasn't. They say that it was poor Jim Smith, son of old Smith of Rustenburg. I tell you what it is, Capt. Niel, you had better be careful; if that girl isn't in love with you, she is something very like it. A girl does not pop over like that for Dick, Tom or Harry. You must forgive an old woman like me for speaking out plain, but she is an odd girl is Jess, just like ten women rolled into one so far as her mind goes, and if you don't take care you will get into trouble, which will be rather awkward, as you are going to marry her sister. Jess isn't a girl to have a bit of a flirt to pass away the time and have done with it, I can tell you;" and she shook her head solemnly, as though she suspected him of trifling with his future sister in law's young affections, and then, without waiting for an answer, turned and went into the cottage.

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

MONDAY, JULY 1887.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Picnic Postponed.

St. Luke's Church Sunday School picnic which was announced to take place on Tuesday, has been unavoidably postponed.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Church Closed.

On Sunday evening St. Paul's Church was closed so as to enable the congregation to attend St. Andrew's Church anniversary services. St. Andrew's was crowded.

The Gospel Tent.

Messers. Irving and Marshall held two evangelistic meetings in the gospel tent near Hamilton's agricultural works, on Sunday, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. The meetings were well attended.

Under the Gaslight

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling, for 45 cents.

SEE KIDD'S stock of boots and shoes Prices away, away down.

LADIES' low shoes in the most beautiful style at KIDD'S.

Rowse's Trade Palace.

Among the merchants who illuminated their places of business on the night of Dominion Day was Mr. O. C. Rowse. The Trade Palace was in a blaze of light and looked very pretty from the street.

Fire.

On Saturday night the Fire Brigade was called out to put out a fire on College street. A few pailfuls of water however, quenched the fire before the arrival of the brigade. The blaze was caused by a lamp exploding. The damage was slight.

LADIES' water-proof circulars, only 77cts at TURNBULL'S.

Bridge Shipped.

The Central Bridge Works sent out a bridge on Thursday which was shipped via the Grand Trunk Railway to Mitchell, Ont. The bridge was consigned to the Council of Fullerton Township. Business at the Central Bridge Works is brisk. The huge steam hammer, which is in operation every day, is the object of much interest.

Public Baths.

The need of public baths in Peterborough is urgently felt. There is not a place where bathers can enjoy the luxury of a swim without broiling themselves in a walk of two or three miles, or incurring the displeasure of the police. If some enterprising citizen would undertake to build suitable baths it could not fail to be a paying investment.

Plate Glass.

The enterprising hardware men, Fortye & Phelan, received this morning a consignment of eighteen lights of plate glass for Mr. Geo. A. Cox. The glass will be placed in the business places of Messrs. J. McAleer, Stenson Bros., A. L. Davis & Co., W. J. Mason, and T. Dolan. They also received three lights for Mr. J. Stevenson. This is the largest shipment ever received in the Plate Glass City.

GENUINE French goat boots for ladies' at KIDD'S for $1.75 per pair.

The Nicholls Hospital.

Number of patients in hospital for the month ending June 30th, 1887, 4. Diseases—spinal disease, 1; abscess and synovitis, 1; paralysis, 2; discharged cured, 7; improved, 2; Deaths, 1. Total number treated during month, 14; from Peterborough, 9; from the County, 5; pay patients, 7; free patients, 7. Dr. Bell attending physician for June, Dr. Pigeon in attendance on pvriate patients.

Presenting Colors.

Adjutant Bolton announces that a great demonstration will be held at Lindsay on July 11th, when colors will be presented to the local Salvation Army corps. The ceremony will be performed by Commissioner Coombs, head of the Army in Canada, assisted by Major Bailey, Quintette No. 1, and officers and soldiers from the surrounding stations. A Holiness convention will be held at 3 p. m. and at 7 p. m. a procession will leave the barracks headed by the brass band. The ten virgins with their lamps will be in the possession.

LADIES' belts in straw, web, alligator and leather, all new designs. For belts call at TURNBULL'S.

Personal.

Mr. John Sullivan, of the "nine mile," has gone to Nebraska to visit his daughter, Mrs. E. McKeiver. He will be absent about three months.

Mr. Charles S. Shaw, who is still in the Bank of Toronto in Montreal, is now in town on a visit to his relations and friends for a few days. On Dominion Day he showed that he had not lost his Peterborough love of the canoe by acting as Commodore in the Lake St. Louis Canoe Club cruise. When Mr. Shaw went to Montreal three years ago canoeing was by no means popular. The Lake St. Louis Canoe Club constituted only about twelve members. The membership now is over two hundred and fifty, while the fee has been raised from $1 to $3 per annum.

A Reason Why People Should Put Their Faith in Christ—The Sign Given by the Half Converted Jew—An Example to Christians.

On Sunday the Rev. Principal Grant, of Queen's College, Kingston, preached in St. Andrew's Church on the occasion of the anniversary of the opening of the church. In the morning he took his text from Genesis xxviii., 17:—"And he was afraid and said: How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of Heaven."

What kind of a house was it? he asked. It wasn't a house at all. It was no church, or chapel, or cathedral. It was no dimly lighted grotto, appealing to the imagination, nor was it sanctified by tradition. It was a bleak, lonely spot where a lonely, homeless and landless man had laid himself down. Bare hills surrounded the spot. Rocks were contiguous. Before him was the road which led and continued to lead through the central part of the land of Palestine. Jacob was no doubt feeling far from comfortable, for he was escaping from home with his father righteously displeased with him and his brother righteously angered with him. And wearied,

AS THE SUN WAS SETTING

he looked around for a place to rest. He lay down with the tall rocks about him standing as sentinels. Anon these rocky sentinels seem to have taken form—to resolve themselves into a staircase leading to Heaven. This might be an impression of the senses. But an occurrence takes place which could not be accounted for in that way. The sleeper sees angels ascending and decending upon the ladder. And the Lord declared Himself unto Jacob saying that He was the Lord God of Abraham and of Isaac, that the land on which he lay was his and that his seed should bless the earth. Strange revelation made to man under such circumstances. Jacob wakes. Everything looks as dull and prosaic as before. If one of the congregation saw such an experience the first impulse would likely have been to say, "I have been dreaming." Jacob did not take that view. He believed that it was a real revelation from God. He wished to ask first, was Jacob justified in assuming that this was a genuine revelation from God and not a mere dream? In asking this question, he was asking a most important one, and not only so far as we are concerned, for if Jacob's assumption were not justified, then the spiritual experiences of all the other patriarchs might be called in question in a similar manner. But if, on the other hand, Jacob's vision was a real revelation, it might be assumed that all other similar visions recorded in the Bible were true also; and if God revealed Himself to this lonely Jew, would it be more wonderful for Him to reveal Himself to us to-day? Was Jacob justified by the future in his assumption? In the first place he believed that it was a revelation, and he declared that if the Lord would be his God he would dedicate a tenth of all he had to God.

IT WAS A GOOD SIGN

that he believed. How many christian consecrated a tenth of their substance to the service of the Lord? Some there were who grudged a hundredth part. Jacob continued to live a Godly life, the Lord was his God and future events vindicated what he saw and heard in the revelation. From a very poor character he became a great character; his children did inherit the land and he became a blessing to future generations. Though he endured many trials he became one of the patriarchs of Gods people who was looked back to with veneration by succeeding generations, and if this poor Jew, with nothing to guide him believed that it was a revelation, why should not we, with all the records of spiritual experiences before us, listen when God talked with our spirits. He urged the people to believe in Christ. The results would surely verify the belief. Were not all the hopes of human progress, happiness and development, based on assumption. We believed in the great scientific principles and the result verified the belief So to in morality. How could we distinguish between right and wrong. Conscience tells us to do one thing, the senses the opposite. But after life showed that the man who followed the dictates of his conscience and the man who doesn't is a degraded fiend. In the same way people should trust Christ. They should take Him at His word. He would surely vindicate their faith. In the second place he spoke of Jacob's action in setting Bethel apart as a holy place. When Jacob arose he exclaimed that the Lord was in this place and he knew it not. Jacob localized God. The preacher traced the history of Bethel down through succeeding generations, showing that even Kings of Israel held Bethel as a holy place, and arguments were raised as to which were the holiest, Bethel or other places. We, who had much clearer views of God, should adopt the best part of Jacob's vision. We would set up an altar in a street corner where God mayhap had revealed Himself to us, but could we pass that place without feeling that the spot was filled with sacred memories. The preacher had stood on Iona, and, though he did not build an altar, yet as he stood he was filled with the thoughts of what the heroic monks of old had done to evan elise fatherland. And it was the same thing that brought us to regard the church as a sacred place—here where God had revealed Himself to sinners and to His own people. Our conceptions were higher than those of the half converted Jew who slept at Bethel. We knew that God was a spirit and dwelt everywhere God could commune with us wherever we were. And when God had raised us so much above Jacob surely we would give equally with the poor Jew. Some said: "I work for what I get; I earned it; it's mine." Did not Jacob labor hard for his? Consider what Christ gave for the world. On this anniversary day, not only of the building of the new church, but of the old, and that of their pastor's induction, they should show themselves to be worthy of God. Only then would God acknowledge them to be genuine. Only then would God honor them. Jacob trusted God, would they not trust Him?

IS A HAPPY MAN,

A Spill.

This afternoon several cars while being backed down to the Otonabee mills, Ashburnham. When the brakes came to be used they refused to act properly. Those on top of the cars seeing that it was useless to try to stop the train got off and the first car coming to the end of the switch jumped clear over the abuttment and fell to the ground some ten or fifteen feet below. The second car got about half way over. The wheat, with which the cars were laden, was scattered in all directions to the amount of about six hundred and fifty bushels. This is the second accident of the kind which has occurred on this siding.

The Heat.

The thermal weather continues. On Sunday the thermometer registered 94 deg. in the shade, and to-day it has been living in the nineties. Mr. J. J. Daly, of Congress Hall, Lindsay, is in town to-day. He says he came down to cool off.

Departed.

The Wizard Oil men took their departure from town this forenoon, to make fresh conquests on other fair fields. They had a "big house" on Saturday night.

Lock Works Closed.

The Lock Works is closed to-day to allow the employees to celebrate the fourth of July. Some have gone across the border and some have remained here.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. RED RIVER VALLEY RAILWAY.

First Sod Turned at Fort Rouge on Saturday by Norquay.

WINNIPEG, July 3.—The first sod of the Red River Valley Railroad was turned yesterday at Fort Rouge, about three miles from the city. Premier Norquay turned the first sod and made a brief speech, and was followed by Hon. Dr. Wilson and other members of the Cabinet. About 500 people were present. Very little interest was manifested in the proceedings, probably on account of its being generally understood that the Government had been unsuccessful in their efforts to raise funds for the completion of the work.

Chemong Lake Railway.

As was announced at the Council meeting a few nights ago it is altogether probable that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has purchased the line from Peterborough to Chemong Lake. What will be done with it is not known. It will cost about $30,000 to put the road in good running order. New ties will have to be laid, the present rails replaced with steel rails, new culverts built, grading done over again and the trees and brush which has grown on various parts of the road will have to be cut down. But if opened up the road would justify the outlay. Considerable traffic would come off the lake; a large trade in cordwood would be done during the fall and it is altogether likely that a summer hotel would be built in the Chemong Lake Park, which property is owned by a Peterborough syndicate. It would not be a surprise to see work commenced to open up the line this season, as Mr. Hickson is noted for his promptness.

Gospel Tent.

Messrs. Marshall and Irving, evangelists, continue to hold nightly meetings in the tent on the lot north of P. Hamilton's foundry and between George st. and Denne's mill. Any one who will overcome carelessness or prejudice and go in for an evening will be convinced that it is a great pity the services are not more generally known. The freedom from cant, slang, and irreverence is very marked. Both men are evangelists of wide reputation, and are very earnest, forcible speakers. There are no collections whatever, and everyone is cordially welcomed.

Early Closing.

An agreement has been signed by the practising solicitors of this town to close their respective offices at the hour of four o'clock p.m. during the months of July and August. Parties having law business must govern themselves accordingly. 1d3

Not Dead.

The young fellow who got into a row at Lindsay with outsiders on the day of the Sons of England excursion was reported to have died since. This, however, is not true.

Winding Up

A meeting of the Jubilee committee is to held this evening to settle all affairs relating to the celebration.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

FENELON FALLS.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—During the short, but sharp, storm Friday afternoon the house of Mr. Joseph Littleton, sr., of Fenelon, was struck by lightning, which smashed several lengths of stovepipe, tore up part of the kitchen floor, and drove a lot of splinters into some clothes that were hanging on a line. Nobody was hurt.—Gazette.

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

DROWNING ACCIDENT.

A Lad Falls Unnoticed into a Raceway at Belleville.

BELLEVILLE, July 4.—On Saturday evening boys were playing on the bank of the river below the upper bridge, near the entrance to the raceway leading to Cooper's mill, when one of the number, Fred Carscallen, found a hat, which was recognized as belonging to Harry Bogle, the five-year-old son of Mr. Robert Bogle, real estate agent. The alarm was given, as it was immediately surmised that the little fellow was in the water. The banks of the raceway were soon lined with an anxious crowd, while a party of river drivers and others searched for the body. The water was not very deep, so the men joined hands and the line reaching from bank to bank of the raceway waded in at the mill and started up stream. When about half way to the entrance of the course, a river driver, named Joseph Baker, found the body and brought it to the surface. A police officer carried it to the house of Ald. Pringle, grandfather of the little fellow. The scene as the body was taken to the house was heartrending, as the boy had a warm place in the affections of the family. Mr Bogle was absent from home on his way to Rome, N. Y., but was telegraphed the sad news and will reach home this evening. Mr. Bogle lost an amiable wife and another small child about a year ago, which adds much to the sympathy that is felt for him in this new affliction.—Intelligencer.

WHEAT YIELD OF EUROPE.

A Backward Spring—Production will be Below the Average.

LONDON, July 4.—The indications are that there will be a wheat yield considerably under the average in all European countries except Russia and Austo-Hungary. Outside these two great grain fields in the East Europe has practically had no spring whatever, although the warm sun of June has greatly improved the wheat. Late harvests have usually been bad ones, and there is no reason to expect that this one will be an exception. It is noteworthy that Algiers is credited with an excellent crop on a greatly enlarged acreage. As all the surplus wheat goes to France, and as the Colonial product is admitted there without duty of 5f. per 100 kilos which foreign wheat is charged, this fact will operate on the side of the French protectionists by tending to prevent a rise in the price of bread. England is likely to be a heavy purchaser, for the yield here is poor, and the India crop is 6 per cent. below last year, with the available surplus for exportation still more reduced, for the reason that the failure of the other food crops has compelled a large native consumption of wheat.

EMPEROR KEE NANG SEE.

Preparing for His Marriage — It will Cost Five Million Dollars.

LONDON, July 4.—The Chinese Court in preparing for an elaborate cermonial, the cost of which is computed at $5,000,000, at the approaching marriage of the young Emperor, Kee Nang See, which will be the signal for him to assume real control of the Empire, the nominal charge of which was vested in him six months ago, when he paid a formal visit to the tombs of his ancestors of the Manchu family, north of Pekin. No hint is given yet of who is the chosen bride, but precedent warrants the assumption that she is the daughter of some one of the numerous Imperial Princes. The celebration is to be of the most costly and gorgeous character, far surpassing the last Imperial marriage—that of Tung Che in 1872. It is reported that many important changes in the personnel of the Chinese Government are impending, which will largely alter the Empire's foreign policy.

Fire in Ottawa.

OTTAWA, July 4.—A fire broke out this afternoon in an oil tank at the Canadian Pacific Railway station and communicated to the lumber piles in close proximity belonging to Messrs. Bronson and Booth. The fire extended rapidly and as the piles contained several million feet and extended over to lumber mills it was feared it might become a very disastrous one. Several hundred men were soon at work pulling down the piles. All the engines and reels in the city were summoned to the scene and finally got the fire under control.

Arrived from Yokohama.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 4.—The Parthia, Capt. Brooghy, arrived here from Yokohama, all well, at 1 o'clock a. m. She was detained yesterday at Esquimaux 2 hours, whilst changing pilots. She experienced slight head winds and misty weather nearly all the voyage. Upon entering the straits yesterday morning she encountered a gale, in which the pilot, Cutter, lost his boat. She left Yokohama on the 20th of June, at 1 p.m.

G. T. R. to the Rescue.

WINNIPEG, July 4.—Although the Government has not floated the Red River Valley Railway bonds, it is understood they see their way clear to raising sufficient money to prosecuted the work. It is suggested that probably the Grand Trunk has come to the rescue. The contract was let before the Act was disallowed, if it is disallowed, and the contractors, having procured the best legal advice, are satisfied that they are in a perfectly legal and protected position.—Mail.

Another Sheriff Dead.

WHITBY, Ont. July 4.—Thomas Paxton, Sheriff of Ontario County, died at six o'clock last evening. Dropsy was the disease which at last set in. He had been in precarious health since early spring. Deceased represented North Ontario in the Ontario Legislature, from Confederation until his appointment as sheriff in 1881.

Large Arrivals of Grain.

KINGSTON, July 4.—Since Saturday night about a quarter of a million bushels of grain arrived here from Chicago and Duluth Canadian vessels for the return cargo take ore here at $1 per ton to Chicago and American vessels coal from Oswego to Chicago at $1.90 per ton.

NEW ENGLISH COINAGE.

LONDON, July 4.—There is no dissenting voice to the outcry against the new coinage. There is a practical grievance in the case. The sixpence can be gilded into an identical resemblance to the half sovereign. The Gaiety bar took in 13 of these and the Crystal Palace 41 in a single day; but the objection to all on account of their ugliness is so strong that Boehm, the sculptor, who modelled the head, is forced in self-defence to explain that he made a good effigy, but the Queen personally insisted on the alterations which have so offended the public eye. In consequence Mr. Boehm will get no more jobs at Windsor, but he at least will not be the artistic laughing stock of Europe.

TROUBLE AT BELFAST.

BELFAST, July 4.—While some Orangemen were bathing in the Lagan, yesterday, they were attacked by a crowd of Catholics. Companions of the Orangemen rallied and the two sides pelted each other with stones for half an hour when the arrival of the police put an end to the fight and the Orangemen retired. The Catholics resisted the police and were repulsed with difficulty. Many were injured on both sides.

O'DONNELL AND THE TIMES.

LONDON, July 4.—Something sinster is thought by many to underlie Mr. O'Donnell's outbreak against the Times. Since Mr. Parnell caused his retirement from Irish politics he has been living quite broken in health at a Bavarian resort. He asserts that he entered a libel suit against the Times, and purposes to summon Mr. Parnell and others to give evidence. It is thought that he will not be sorry at possibly damnaging Parnell by compelling him to submit to cross-examination by the Times' counsel.

A RUSSIAN ORGAN.

BRUSSELS, July 4.—Le Nord, the Russian organ published here, commenting on the Egyptian question, says that Russia will not fail France, and refutes the report that Russia will not concern herself in Egypt in return for English concessions in Bulgaria. Russia, Germany and Austria, the paper continues, are friendly. If they do not agree on the Egyptian question it will simply result in liberty of action for each power, adds Le Nord, and Germany, Austria and Italy will not espouse England's cause to the extent of affording her assistance.

DR. McGLYNN EXCOMMUNICATED.

ROME, July 4.—Orders have been sent to the Archbishop of New York to excommunicate the Rev. Dr. McGlynn and to publish the decree in the journals.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITY.

LONDON, July 4.—In the House of Commons to-night a motion by Mr. W. H. Smith was carried that Government bills be given priority during the remainder of the session. In reply to Mr. Gladstone, he said he would take up the Crimes bill for third reading on Thursday.

M. DE LESSEPS BELIEVES.

PARIS, July 4.—Referring to the Egyptian question, M. de Lesseps says:—If England does not clear out of Egypt sooner or later she will have to fight France. I don't say that France will go to war at once. At present she may not be strong enough. But however weak she may be to-day she is sure to rise again, and when she does rise England will have to settle accounts with her. It is a life or death question for France. She can never consent to England's capture of Egypt. If this Anglo-Turkish convention is signed, the Sultan will lose his throne, for I have letters here announcing that a religious chief in Arabia is preparing a revolution."

A Bogus Agitation.

WINNIPEG, July 4.—A Brandon despatch to the Winnipeg Sun says:—Your correspondent, after making the minutest inquiries in reference to that resolution favoring disallowance, said to have been passed "unanimously," has learned that it was passed in the office of Mr. Scarth's Company, and that the only persons present were the local agent of the company, two proteges of Mr. Scarth, and Mr. Cliff. It is stated on good authority that Mr. Scarth himself sent the resolution from Ottawa, with a request that it be passed. The people of Brandon are very indignant over the matter, and only about half a dozen knew the meeting was held.

Killed by Lightning.

A young girl named Desrosiers was killed by lightning at Vaudreuil on Saturday afternoon. It was just before the heavy thunderstorm, and the young girl was going to milk her cows in the field, when the fatal blow suddenly struck her dead. Her father, who had warned her to wait a little, and other friends saw her fall and ran to help her, but only arrived to find that she had been instantaneously killed.

Fine Sample of Gold.

KINGSTON, July 4.—A sample of ore taken from the gold mine at Kaladar has yielded $30 per ton. An English company has proposed to erect works at the mine and take its pay in percentage. The owners of the mine are: H. M. Deroche, J. H. Downey, of Napanee; J. Guana, A. P. Wychwire, of Kaladar, and Father O'Donoghue, of Belleville.

Sir D. A. Smith, LL.D.

Sir Donald Smith has just received a fresh honor, having, on the 20th of June, received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Cambridge University. In the customary Latin eulogium Dr. Sandys, the public orator, referred to Sir Donald's magnificent donation for the Jubilee Hospital, and to his prominent part in completing the Canadian Pacific Railway.

MISREPRESENTING THE FARMERS.

THE suspicious identity of the resolutions in favour of Commercial Annexation passed by different "Farmers' Institutes" points out the artificial nature of the agitation. The opinions thus expressed are part of a cut-and-dried programme circulated by a few agitators and so far adopted only by a few cliques and their small number of dupes. Whatever these wire-pullers may pretend the farmers as a body have not spoken, and are not truly represented y their self-constituted mouthpieces. At some meetings where there has been a good attendance of farmers they have not been allowed to vote, on the plea that only members of the "Institute" had a voice, and then the little band of politicians and their dupes, some of them not even farmers, have assumed to speak for the agriculturalists of the districts, who had either remained absent and indifferent or if present were denied the right to vote. To those farmers who have been led away by the inaccurate statements of these agitators and to the larger body who have held completely aloof from either side of the discussion we would give the practical advice that they should examine for themselves the market prices in the two countries, and the returns of exports and imports, so that they may judge for themselves what foundation there is for the delusive promises held out to them by interested agitators and speculative theorists. The actual facts and figures will show what would be the result. What for instance would be the gain from paying the cost of carrying wheat or cheese or pork to a market where no higher price is to be obtained than can be got at the next town without paying the cost of carriage. Any farmer can obtain such figures without difficulty and can then judge for himself.

BEGIN AT HOME.

IT cannot be denied that there is a considerable degree of impertinence in the visit of a little clique of lawyers and speculators from the United States to teach the people of Canada how they should manage their affairs. If our visitors had any [illegible] to bring to us from their own land, if they had any offer to make to us on behalf of their countrymen, far from deeming them impertinent, we would thank them for their sympathy, and the people of Canada would freely discuss the matter with them, ready to learn from them or from any other quarter.

But the position is far different. Mr. Butterworth and his little mutual admiration society are constantly parading his "Bill," as if it were a tangible offer from the United States. In fact it is a mere phantasy of his own, repudiated by the leading journals of his country, and so unpopular in Congress that as a member of that body he did not venture to submit it to a vote. He may hope to reintroduce it under more favorable auspices, if he can represent it as being favoured by Canada, and in the probable event of his failing to convince his own House he will at least have had the benefit of lifting an insignificant politician into that notoriety which he appears to crave. But while he and his friends are not in the least measure authorized to speak for the United States, Canada by its Parliament has made and is maintaining on its statute books a standing offer of reciprocal free trade in a number of articles, open to the acceptance of our neighbours at any moment. Surely then it is for the United States, if it wishes to remove restrictions, to accept this dvance or at least to make it the basis of a modified offer.

If Mr. Butterworth wishes to remove restrictions on the commercial intercourse between the two countries, why does he not begin by trying to convert his own people instead of coming to lecture Canadians under the auspices of political intriguers.

SPEAKING of the Customs the London Advertiser says:—"Many a spy and informer has acquired a fortune at the expence of the honest trader." This is nonsense. Honest importers would not give a fortune to spies and informers, though dishonest importers might do so. Honest importers might, however, pay small sums rather than be harrassed by frivolous complaints, and to prevent any opportunities for blackmailing neither informers nor officials should be allowed a share of the moneys obtained. No doubt Mr. Bowell's measure, promised for next session, will so provide. If not it should be amended in this sense.

NORWOOD.

From our own Correspondent.

THREE STRAIGHTS.—The Norwood team went to Stirling on the 1st and defeated the Stirling Jubilees by 3 games to 0. The Stirling team, although a first year club, fought bravely, and will in a short time begin to be able to hold their own with many of the older clubs. Owing to intense heat several of the home men were used up, and during the two hours and a quarter that the lacrosse clubs were on the grounds there was scarcely an hour's actual play. The boys speak highly of the manner in which they were used and hope to have a return match played here shortly. Where all did so well it is hardly fair to mention the playing of any particular player or players.

ALL ABROAD.

M. Thiers is credited with this saying:—"Men will die for their country, but they will not make pig iron for their country." We regret to say that there are some Canadians who object to letting other Canadians make pig iron for their country. They think it ought all to be made abroad.—Toronto World (Indep.)

IRELAND.

The number of visitors to the Lakes of Killarney have been unprecedentedly large this year.

The Sustentation Fund of the Irish Presbyterian Church shows a decrease of £400 this year.

On the 7th of June Wheeler's docks, Queenstown, valued at £1,016, were put up for sale, but there were no bidders.

The widow of Dr. Fleming Stevenson has presented 6,000 volumes to the Belfast College, in memory of her husband.

It is reported that Mr. William Ewart, M. P. for North Belfast, will receive a baronetcy, and that the Mayor of Belfast will be knighted.

A young man named Bowler, servant to a boycotted farmer called Burke, was fired at on the night of June 12th, near Farranfore, and seriously wounded.

Prof. Wallace has resigned the chair of sacred ethics in Belfast College on account of failing health. Dr. Todd Martin, of Newtownards, has been elected his assistant and successor.

It was discovered on the 15th June, that all the windows of the Presbyterian Church, Parsonstown, King's County, had been broken. The inside of the edifice was littered with stones and broken glass, and some of the furniture in the vestry was broken.

A brutal murder by moonlighters is reported from County Kerry. Late on Monday evening, June 13th, a party of ruffians entered the house of a widow at Farranfore, between Tralee and Castleisland, pulled a man named Jeremiah Hurley out of bed, and fired several shots at him, killing him almost instantly.

The Sub-Sheriff of Clare was more severely scalded at the Bodyke evictions than was at first supposed. He had to put soothing applications to the burn during the day the eviction expedition rested. Large portions of the skin and flesh peeled off wherever the boiling water came in contact with it.

At a meeting of the New Ross guardians, on the 8th June, four of the Fethard evicted tenants—William Cooke, Thomas Macnamara, William Macnamara, and John Warren—were brought before the board and informed by the Chairman, Mr. Nolan, that as they were able-bodied men they with their families should leave the workhouse, that the ratepayers were after supporting them long enough, and by the following Tuesday they must be prepared to leave.

A car owner in Ennis, named Peter Curtin, who supplied a two horse car to bring police to the Bodyke evictions, has been subjected since to a rigorous system of boycotting. He keeps a public house and nobody will enter it or employ his cars. He had tradesmen employed putting a new roof on his house, and they quit the work, and he can get no person to take their places. Curtin alleges that the car and [illegible] been taken under compulsion [illegible] of whom acted as driver; [illegible] is flatly denied by William Groves who has a contract to supply the police with cars, and who states he had engaged for that special occasion the car from Curtin three weeks before.

Commercial Union Logic.

President Fuller was in the chair, and Granger Shaw was discussing the question of commercial union. "Last year," said Mr. Shaw, "Canada exported 16,118 horses to the United States, valued at $2,104,355." The weather was warm, Mr. Fuller had heard the story before; and at this point he quietly closed his eyes and for a few moments, under "the spell of Somnus," he lost consciousness of the eloquent address of Mr. Shaw. The latter went on: "The duty was 20 per cent, or $420,871; and as nothing is clearer than that the producer pays the duty, the farmers of Canada lost that sum. Under commercial union they would have it in their pockets instead of paying it into the United States treasury. Then there is coal," continued Mr. Shaw. "Last year we imported 1,974,462 tons, paying a duty of $1,071,598.94. Now, nothing is clearer than that the consumer pays the duty." "What's that?" cried Mr. Fuller, suddenly waking up. "The producer pays the duty. The Canadian farmer pays the duty. If we had commercial union the Canadian farmer would get the full United States price." Mr. Shaw looked puzzled for a moment, but he took in the situation at a glance, and said, "I was talking about coal." "Oh! yes! certainly," said Mr. Fuller; "the consumer always pays the duty," and slumber again crept over his eyelids while Mr. Shaw proceeded to establish the facts relating to commercial union.—Hamilton Spectator.

A Very Thoughtful Act.

Two gentlemen were dining at a high priced restaurant and each had before him a porterhouse steak, a loaf of bread, potatoes galore and a side dish of some sort. Each had ordered the same dishes, and the bill, exclusive of a small bottle of wine, was over $3. One of the parties is a well known attorney, and the other is well known on St. Anthony Hill. Said the attorney: "There's enough food here for half a dozen persons; suppose we dine off the same dishes and give the balance to some poor chap who hasn't had a square meal today. Though not in accordance with the rules of the house, we'll take what we cannot eat away with us."

His companion willingly acquiesced, and after dinner they placed the remainder of their victuals in a newspaper, and, after paying their bill, walked out. They met a little newsboy, who begged them to purchase an evening paper. He had six left and was "stuck," and it was so late he couldn't sell them. The attorney's companion purchased all the papers, adding an extra dime, and the astonished little chap, with a dumb show of thanks, grabbed the package of food that was given him and dashed up the street. "Eat it yourself," said one of the gentlemen, before the lad ran away. "Oh, no!" was the reply, "I'll take it to mother." It's dollars to a pair of old boots that the boy was honest, and that he will be a good citizen some day.—Pioneer Press "Listener."

How Nye Softened Stanton.

Senator Nye went to Secretary Stanton one day to make a petition for some dead soldier's orphans. It was in the darkest days of the war. Stanton said: "I have not time, Mr. Nye, to see what you want." "Suppose you take time, Mr. Secretary." "You are unreasonable, Mr. Nye, in pressing such a thing at this time," said Stanton. "Permit me to say that you are the unreasonable man," answered Nye. "If you were not a United States senator I should say that you were very impertinent," said Stanton haughtily. "If you were not a great secretary of war I should be tempted to say you were making a blanked fool of yourself," replied the old Gray Eagle, with his eyes blazing. Stanton looked at him a moment, and then softening said: "Maybe I am, Jim—who knows—come inside and tell me all about it." "Now, Ned, my boy, you are growing sensible," said Nye, and the business was quickly arranged.—Ben: Perley Poore.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

As for John, he only groaned. What could he do but groan? The whole thing was self evident, and if ever a man felt ashamed of himself that man was John Nicl. He was a strictly honorable individual, and it cut him to the heart to think that he had entered on a course which was not honorable, considering his engagement to Bessie. When he, a few minutes before, had told Jess he loved her he had said a disgraceful thing, however true a thing it might be. And that was the worst of it; it was true; he did love her. He felt it come sweeping over him like a wave as she stood there looking at him in the room, utterly drowning and overpowering his affection for Bessie, to whom he was bound by every tie of honor. It was a new and wonderful thing, this passion that had arisen within him, as a strong man armed, and driven every other affection away into the waste places of his mind; and, unfortunately, it was an overmastering and, as he already guessed, an enduring thing. He cursed himself in his shame and anger as he sat there recovering his equilibrium on the broken chair and tying a handkerchief tight round his wound. What a fool he had been! Why had he not waited to see which of the two he really took to? Why had Jess gone away like that and thrown him into temptation with her pretty sister? He was sure now that she had cared for him all along. Well, there it was, and a precious bad business too! One thing he was clear about; it should go no further. He was not going to break his engagement to Bessie; it was not to be thought of. But, all the same, he felt sorry for himself and sorry for Jess too.

Just then, however, the bandage on his leg slipped, and the wound began to bleed so fast that he was fain to limp into the house for assistance.

Jess, who had apparently quite got over her agitation, was standing by the table talking to Mrs. Neville, who was persuading her to swallow some of the brandy she had been at such pains to fetch. The moment she caught sight of John's face, which had now turned ghastly white, and saw the red line trickling down his boot, she took up her hat that was lying on the table.

"You had better lie down on the old bedstead in the little room," she said; "I am going for the doctor."

Assisted by Mrs. Neville, he was only too glad to take this advice, but long before the doctor arrived John had followed Jess' example, and, to the intense alarm of Mrs. Neville, who was vainly endeavoring to check the flow of blood, which had now become copious, gone off into a dead faint. On the arrival of the doctor it appeared that the bullet had grazed the walls of one of the arteries on the inside of the thigh without actually cutting them, but that they had now given way, which rendered it necessary to tie the artery. This operation, with the assistance of chloroform, he proceeded to successfully carry on on the spot, announcing afterward that a great deal of blood had already been lost.

When at last it was over, Mrs. Neville asked about John being moved up to the hospital, but the doctor declared that he must stop where he was, and that Jess must stop and help to nurse him, with the assistance of a soldier's wife he would send down.

"Dear me," said Mrs. Neville, "that is very awkward."

"It will be awkwarder if you try to move him at present," was the grim reply, "for the silk may slip, in which case the artery will probably break out again, and he will bleed to death."

As for Jess, she said nothing, but set to work to make preparations for her task of nursing. As fate had once more thrown them together, she accepted the position gladly, though it is only fair to say that she would not have sought it.

In about an hour's time, just as John was beginning to recover from the painful effects of the chloroform, the soldier's wife who was to assist her in nursing arrived. She was, as Jess soon discovered, not only a low stamp of woman, but both careless and ignorant into the bargain, and all that she could be relied on to do was to carry out some of the rougher work of the sick room. When John woke up and discovered whose was the presence that was bending over him and whose the cool hand that lay upon his forehead, he groaned again and went to sleep. But Jess did not go to sleep. She sat by him there throughout the night, until at last the cold lights of the dawn came gleaming through the window and fell upon the white face of the man she loved. He was still sleeping soundly, and, as the night was exceedingly hot and oppressive, she had left nothing but a sheet over him. Before she went to rest a little herself she turned to look at him once more, and as she did so saw the sheet suddenly grow red with blood. The artery had broken out again.

Calling to the soldier's wife to run across to the doctor, Jess shook her patient until he woke, for he was sleeping sweetly through the whole thing, and would, no doubt, have continued to do so until he glided into a deeper sleep; and then between them they did what they could to quench that dreadful pumping flow, Jess knotting her handkerchief round his leg and twisting it with a stick, while he pressed his thumb upon the severed artery. But strive as they would they were only partially successful, and Jess began to think that he would die in her arms from loss of blood. It was agonizing to wait there minute after minute and see his life ebbing away.

"I don't think I shall last much longer, Jess. God bless you, dear!" he said. "The place is beginning to go round and round."

Poor soul, she could only shut her teeth and wait for the end.

Presently John's pressure on the wounded artery relaxed, and he fainted off, and, oddly enough, just then the flow of blood diminished considerably. Another five minutes, and she heard the quick step of the doctor coming up the path.

"Thank God you have come! He has bled dreadfully."

"I was out attending a poor fellow who was shot through the lung, and that fool of a woman waited for me to come back, instead of following. I have brought you an orderly instead of her. By Jove, he has bled! I suppose the silk has slipped. Well, there is only one thing for it. Orderly, the chloroform."

And then followed another long half hour of slashing and tying and horror, and when at last the unfortunate John opened his eyes again he was too weak to speak, and could only smile feebly. For three days after this he was in a dangerous state, for if the artery had broken out for the third time the chances were that, having so little blood left in his veins, he would die before anything could be done for him. At times he was very delirious from weakness, and these were the dangerous hours, for it was almost impossible to keep him quiet, and every movement threw Jess into an agony of terror lest the silk fastenings of the artery should break away. Indeed, there was only one way in which she could keep him quiet, and that was by laying her slim white hand upon his forehead or giving it to him to hold. Oddly enough, this had more effect upon his fevered mind than anything else. For hour after hour she would sit thus, though her arm ached and her back felt as if it were going to break in two, until at last she was rewarded by seeing his wild eyes cease their wanderings and close in peaceful sleep.

Yet with it all that week was perhaps the happiest time in her life. There he lay, the man she loved with all the intensity of her deep nature; and she ministered to him, and felt that he loved her, and depended on her, as a babe upon its mother. Even in his delirium her name was continually on his lips, and generally with some endearing term before it. She felt in those dark hours of doubt and sickness as though they two were growing life to life, knit up in a divine identity she could not analyze or understand. She felt that it was so, and she believed that, once being so, whatever her future might be, that communion could never be dissolved, and therefore was she happy, though she knew that his recovery meant their lifelong separation. For though Jess had once, when thrown utterly off her balance, given her passion sway, it was not a thing she meant to repeat. She had, she felt, injured Bessie enough already in taking her future husband's heart. That she could not help now, but she would take no more. John should go back to her sister.

And so she sat and gazed at that sleeping man through the long watches of the night and was happy. There lay her joy. Soon he would be taken from her and she would be left desolate, but while he lay there he was hers. It was passing sweet to her woman's heart to lay her hand upon him and see him sleep, for this desire to watch the sleep of a beloved object is one of the highest and strangest manifestations of passion. Truly, and with a keen insight into the human heart, has the poet said that there is no joy like the joy of a woman watching what she loves asleep.

The time went on and the artery broke out no more, and then at last came a morning when John opened his eyes and watched the pale, earnest face bending over him as though he were trying to remember something. Presently he shut his eyes again. He had remembered.

"I have been very ill, Jess," he said, after a pause.

"Yes, John."

"And you have nursed me?"

"Yes, John."

"Am I going to recover?"

"Of course you are."

He shut his eyes again.

"I suppose there is no news from outside?"

"No more; things are just the same."

"Nor from Bessie?"

"None; we are quite cut off."

Then came a pause.

"John," said Jess, "I want to say something to you. When people are delirious, or when delirium is coming on, they sometimes say things that they are not responsible for, and which had better be forgotten."

"Yes," he said; "I understand."

"So," she went on, in the same measured tone, "we will forget everything you may fancy that you said or that I did since the time when you came in wounded and found that I had fainted."

"Quite so," said John; "I renounce them all."

"We renounce them all," she corrected, and gave a solemn little nod of her head and sighed, and thus they ratified that audacious compact of oblivion.

But it was a lie, and they both knew that it was a lie. If love had existed before, was there anything in his helplessness and her long and tender care to make it less? Alas! no; rather was their companionship the more perfect and their sympathy the more complete. "Propinquity, sir; propinquity," as the wise man said; we know the evils of it.

From that day forward they forgot that scene in the sitting room of "The Palatial," when Jess put out her strength and John bent and broke before it like a rush before the wind. Surely it was a part of the delirium! They forgot that now, alas! they loved each other with a love that did but gather force from its despair. They talked of Bessie, and of John's marriage, and discussed Jess' plans for going to Europe, just as though these were not matters of spiritual life and death to each of them. In short, however they might for one brief moment have gone astray, now, to their honor be it said, they followed the path of duty with unflinching feet, nor did they cry when the stones cut them.

But it was all a living lie, and they knew it. For between them stood the irrevocable Past, who for good or evil had bound them together in his unchanging bonds, and with cords that could not be broken.

"Some said, 'John, print it,' others said 'Not so,'
Some said, 'It might do good,' others said, 'No.'"

If the discoverer of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy had shared the senseless prejudices of a certain class of physicians he would have refused to print the good news, to proclaim to the world the glorious tidings that an infallible remedy for that most loathsome disease, catarrh, had been discovered. But he advertised liberally and the result has justified him in the course he pursued. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy never fails. All druggists.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

The Daily Review.

TUESDAY, JULY 5, 1887.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Board of Education.

A meeting of the Board of Education is called for this evening.

Jubilee Decorations.

It is about time the Jubilee decorations were taken down. They are beginning to look rather rusty.

The Golden Eye.

The steamer Golden Eye will discontinue her regular trips for a few days, commencing to-day. Due notice will be given when they will be resumed. 2d3

Examinations.

Seventy-five candidates are writing at the Collegiate Institute for the entrance examination. Fourteen are writing in the second class certificate examination.

Under the Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Erastus Wiman.

This prominent advocate of Commercial Union will not likely visit our town, but it is a very sure thing that Rowse's Satin Mervilleaux at 65c is as good as other houses sell at $1. Go and see them.

Great Excitement.

Hundreds shot into that Cheap Cash Store on George street known as Rowse's Trade Palace, and bought $1 silks for 65c. Dress goods at half price and $3 parasols for $1.50. Their cheap goods astonish everybody.

The Twelfth.

Preparations are being made for a great Orange demonstration here on July 12th. Up to date twenty-five districts, comprising upwards of two hundred and fifty lodges, have accepted invitations. Work on the arches will be commenced at once.

LADIES' low shoes in the most beautiful style at KIDD'S.

Killed by Lightning.

The Port Hope Guide says:—"About eight o'clock on Saturday evening last a young man aged 17 years, named Fred. Krieger, during a thunder storm was killed instantly by lightning at Rice Lake. Deceased, with a companion named Wm. Archer, were camping at Lee's Point, near Bewdley, Rice Lake, and were on the lake fishing when the storm came up. Krieger was killed instantly and his clothes set on fire. Archer was stunned, and when he came to himself found his companion dead. The boat was uninjured. Deceased was a son of Mr. Geo. Krieger, formerly of Canton, and grandson of the late Jacob Krieger, of Hope. The funeral took place Monday afternoon from his grandmother's residence, Millbrook."

Vital Statistics.

The vital statistics for the town for the month of June as taken from the record of the Divisional Registrar are as follows:—

Births	16
Marriages	32
Deaths

For the half year ending on the 30th June they compared with the corresponding six months last year, as follows:—

	1886	1887	Increase
Births	96	128	27
Marriages	51	71	20
Deaths	44	47	3

From the foregoing figures relating to the marriages for June it would appear that Cupid is picking off his victims in double quick order. The fears of bachelors will be allayed when it is known that some of the ministers have sent in returns for the past two months or more.

Recent papers give the following particulars of the promotion and decoration of Sir Cecil Clementi Smith a nephew of the Rev. Vincent Clementi, of this town:—

The new Governor of Ceylon, Sir Cecil Clementi Smith, is one of the many old Paulines who have distinguished themselves. He afterwards proceeded to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he took his B. A. degree in 1862, and his M.A. degree in 1863. He was appointed to be a student interpreter at Hongkong after a competitive examination in 1862. After filling various appointments in that colony, and acting as Colonial Secretary for several years, he was promoted in 1878 to be Colonial Secretary of the Straits Settlements, but before taking up that post he was given a mission to the Philippine Islands to settle certain marine claims against the Spanish Government, and received the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for his services. In 1884 and 1885 Mr. Clementi Smith administered the Government of the Straits Settlements. Among other matters of special importance the Nisero case occurred, for his services in connection with which he again received the thanks of the supreme Government. In 1885 he was appointed to be Lieutenant-Governor and Colonial Secretary of Ceylon, received the C.M.G. in 1886, and the K.C.M.G. in 1886. Lady Cecil Smith is the daughter of the late Mr. Arthur Newcomen of Kirkleathan Hall, Redcar, Yorkshire. Like her accomplished husband, she is very popular in Ceylon, and the appointment of Sir Cecil to the Governorship has been generally approved. The artist's sketch is from a photograph by Mr. A. J. Melhuish of Bond street.

OUR GLORIOUS COUNTRY

PATRIOTIC SPEECH BY THE REV. PRINCIPAL GRANT.

Why Canadians Should be True to Canada—No Country can Compare With it—The Vow Every Canadian Should Take.

On Monday evening a meeting was held in St. Andrew's Church in connection with the anniversary services. The Rev. A. Bell, pastor, occupied the chair, on the platform there were the Rev. Principal Grant, the Rev. E. F. Torrance, the Rev. J. C. Wilson and the Rev. I. Tovell.

The CHAIRMAN made a brief introducing address.

The Rev. Mr. TORRANCE, being called on to speak, congratulated the congergation on the attainment of the first anniversary of the building of the new church and wished them much material and spiritual progress.

The Rev. Principal GRANT addressed the meeting. He had been told by Mr. Macdonell of how beautiful everything looked about the old manse and church. He was glad to hear it, for the last time he was here he felt sorry to see the condition of St. Andrew's in such a thriving young city. When he came his expectations were more than realized. He rejoiced to see such a beautiful house of God built on such a beautiful site He regarded the building of the church as a sign of spiritual advancement. He felt that this was a good way to show spiritual growth. He referred to his sermons of Sunday and emphasized the cardinal points. He had addressed them in the morning on the duty of the individual; in the evening on the duty of the church. He would now say a few words on their duty to the country. He had just come back from the meeting of the General Assembly held at Winnipeg. The delegates had had a trip to the far Pacific coast. The country presented scenes of plenty, industry and grandeur. Everywhere was the same tale of prosperity. And just here he would say that while at Winnipeg he was delighted to meet the delegates from the Northwest. They were the bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Most of them came from old Canada, and they all felt glad that the best men in the church were occupying every place of vantage in the great Northwest. He was rejoiced, too, to learn of the marvellous progress in all of the branches of the church. The various work being done showed fast and steady progress. And when they heard of the great work being done by the other churches their hearts went out to them more than ever. Coming down from Winnipeg the country was marked with the same sign as through the Northwest. What a grand country we had! What a glorious heritage God had given to us! What great strides we were making! When he was a boy the little Province where he lived was as completely severed from the rest of the country as his thumb would be from his hand if it were cut off. But now in the space of one man's life—he would say part of a man's life, for he still felt young—what a change had taken place. The Provinces are all bound together. Great railways traverse the land from ocean to ocean. On the last steamship lines ply from Europe and in the West mails and passengers were arriving from Yokohama. Canada was indeed the centre of the Empire. When such wonderful things had been done within his memory what, he would ask, might be expected ere these boys before him attained his age. Our country was one well worthy of our patriotic feelings. How patriotic were the Judeans to Judea and the ancient Greeks to Greece. Why, they loved countries which we could bury in one of our lakes. How much more then should we love Canada, this great and glorious country of ours. Who was there that would not sacrifice something for his country's weal? Any one that would not was in a state to be pitied. The Russian held his patriotism next to his heart. He would die for holy Russia, as he calls it. The true Frenchman would sacrifice his life for France. Shakespeare, who some thought soared above all nations spoke of England as "this dear, dear land." The Scotch are true to Scotland. Scott's lines: Breathes there a man with soul so dead who never to himself hath said this is my own by native land," and Burns also, reflected the sentiments of the people. and what would the true Irishman not do for Ireland. Yet what country of these could compare with Canada. He advised the people, and especially the boys and girls, to take a vow to do something to make their country better. He spent every holiday he got in strengthing Queen's Univesity, because he knew that this institution would continue to send its young men to the remotest corners of the country, to be a blessing to the nation. He always wanted to be connected with something big. He did not despise small things; far from it. But he always liked to count himself with something big. And that was the reason he was here to-night. He felt that this congregation really did a big thing in building this beautiful Church.

The Rev. A. C. Wilson and the Rev. I. Tovell each spoke a few words.

During the evening the choir sang an anthem; Miss Johnston and Miss Cameron solos, and Miss Johnston and Miss Coe a duet. Miss Carron contributed an organ solo.

An adjournment was made at about 9 o'clock to the School room, were refreshments were served.

Representatives to Grand Lodge—Bro R W Bell, P G, and Bro E E Henderson, P G.

The prosperous and flourishing condition of this lodge, both financially and numerically, is apparent from the following facts taken from the reports of the retiring Secretaries and Treasurer, which show that since the Lodge was resuscitated four years and a half ago, in December, 1882, it has paid every claim or demand made upon it by its members with promptitude; it has furnished its elegant hall, one of the finest, if not the finest, in Peterborough, including a superb piano, and is now entirely free from debt, the last trifling amount, $310, on the furnishing fund, having been paid in full on Monday evening, leaving the lodge without a dollar of indebtedness, and with a handsome cash surplus in the treasury, besides valuable assets representing considerably over $2,000. The lodge has on its roll an active membership in good standing of 112, and is rapidly increasing.

The Daily Review.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 6, 1887.

THE Opposition press is busily circulating some assertions that the Hon. Mr. Thompson, Minister of Justice, used corrupt means to secure his election, and with virtuous indignation are demanding a denial and investigation. They profess to punishment for such acts, if, proved, and the courts are open. But as in so many other cases the accusers will shrink from bringing their charges to the test. Nasty little paragraphs copied by one Opposition paper from another do not involve punishment for perjury. So the law courts are prudently avoided by the calumniators.

THE Toronto News, one of the most active of the annexationist journals, says: "Mr. Wiman's speech has the right ring." Certainly there can be no doubt about identifying Mr. Wiman with rings, but whether his is the right kind of ring is another question. Canada will hardly be tempted to accept commercial or political annexation by the prospect of these Gould rings being admitted free into the Dominion.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S BAIT LAW.

American Fishermen Well Treated, but the French Rigidly Excluded.

NEW YORK, July 5.—A letter from St. John's, Nfld., says; The American schooners find the harbors of Newfoundland more friendly havens than those of Nova Scotia. Several have been able to purchase their bait directly under the eyes of the customs officials. It is understood that the Government have given these officials instructions to give a generous interpretation to their bait laws, that there way be no obstacles placed in the way of a peaceful solution of the fishery troubles with the United States. But the Government evidently intends to enforce the law rigidly against the French fishermen. As an instance of the markedly strong feelings on both sides it may be mentioned that Mr. Scarlett, a customs official sent by the Newfoundland Government to St. Pierre in reference to revenue matters, was ordered by the French Government to leave St. Pierre immediately.

For many years a large illicit traffic has been going on between the French town of St. Pierre and several English town on the adjoining bay. Of late years the smuggling trade has become almost a science. Everyone smuggled, and St. Pierre being only a crown colony, a kind of French garrison, there were little or no port dues to pay, and so smuggling was a very lucrative business. The Newfoundland Government collected in this way of revenue from many thousand inhabitants the sum of $7,000, and it cost the Government $14,000 to collect that sum. As a result of the action of the Parliament just closed the Customs Department sent a squad of customs detectives to that part of the coast just as the large spring trade opened. Many seizures were made and large revenue was collected.

Mr. Scarlett was located at St. Pierre with orders to use the wires and keep his brother officials on the coast line apprised of the several vessels leaving St. Pierre, but he was immediately ordered to leave the island. The Newfoundland Government refuse to recognise the French consul and demand that they shall have a representative at St. Pierre.

Visiting French War Ships.

HALIFAX, July 4.—The French war ships Minerve and Clorinde after taking part in the festivities attending the celebration of the anniversary of the French republic at St. Pierre on the 14th instant will visit the principal gulf ports and the Minerve will remain in Montreal long enough to permit admiral Vigneto visit the Rocky mountains.

THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

Foundation Stone Laid by the Queen. Address by Her Majesty.

LONDON, July 5.—The Queen laid the foundation stone of the Imperial Institute yesterday. She was accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Teck, the Duke of Hesse, Prince Henry of Battenburg, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Prince and Princess Christian. Many other notable persons attended. The streets and houses were gaily decorated with flags and bunting. Twenty thousand persons were present; and much enthusiasm was manifested. The Queen replied to an address of thanks in a firm and audible tone. She said: "I accept with pleasure your loyal and dutiful congratulations. The vast progress made by the people of the Kingdom in the cultivation of the arts and sciences since I ascended the throne is immensely satisfactory. I rejoice to think how greatly the wise counsels of my beloved husband helped to originate and foster the just appreciation of their value to the community. The Albert Hall corporation has in the past worthily commemorated my husband's name. They will, doubtless, in the future strive to justify his anticipations and realize his hopes by assisting the growth of art and scientific knowledge whereby so much happiness and prosperit, has been produced during my reign."

THE LIBERAL SPLIT.

Lord Hartington's Reply to Mr. Gladstone's Assertions.

LONDON, July 5.—The Marquis of Hartington received a deputation to-day. In his address he made an elaborate reply to Mr. Gladstone's statements respecting the reported existence of disputes on the Irish question in the Liberal Cabinet in 1885. Lord Hartington says there were serious disputes and that he frequently wished to resign from the Cabinet, but yielded to Mr. Gladstone's strong remonstrances and remained in the Ministry. The Marquis says he challenged Mr. Gladstone to obtain the Queen's consent to have the cabinet proceedings of the period referred to published, so that the public could see for itself the nature of the differences in the Cabinet and who were on one side and who on the other. "Mr. Gladstone's speech on Saturday," added Lord Hartington, "favoured giving Ireland an autonomy similar to that of New South Wales, England thereby to abandon all control in Ireland, I hope the coutry thoroughly realizes what this means.

A SUSPECTED THIEF.

A Number of Razors and Pocket Knives in His Possession.

NAPANEE, July 4.—Three suspicious looking characters were noticed last Friday loitering in the east end of the town, selling knives and revolvers to the boys as they passed to the river for the purpose of bathing. Information being communicated to the Chief of Police, he, accompanied by Constable Storms, went in search and discovered the parties, who, upon finding they were discovered, fled to the river. One was captured, but the other two escaped by swimming the river. Upon the person of the one captured was found a dozen razors and a number of pocket knives, all new. The prisoner was remanded to gaol for eight days, in order to obtain evidence and allow the owners to recover their goods.

THE CANADIAN TARIFF CHANGES

The Question Discussed in the House of Lords.

LONDON, July 5.—In the House of Lords, last evening, during the discussion which arose over a motion to lay before the Lords, the correspondence between the Home and Canadian Governments relating to the Canadian tariff, Lord Onslow said the policy of the Government was to allow Canada to manage her own fiscal affairs. Earl Granville said the Government should not be debarred from engaging in friendly correspondence with Canada when it was proposed by the latter to impose tariffs disadvantageous to England as compared with other countries. Lord Dunraven contended that Canada's policy in the matter of increasing the tariff on certain articles was really beneficial to England.

The New York Cheese Market.

UTICA, N.Y., July 4.—The cheese market to-day made a handsome advance over last week's, being ½c better, while the transactions are nearly 3,000 boxes less. Sales, boxes, 1,354 at 8½c; 5,838 at 8¾c; 1,107 at 8⅞c; 2,835 at 9c; 1,126 at 9⅛c; 150 at 9¼c; 181 at 9⅜c. 100 on private terms. 2,631 commission. Total, 15,317. Ruling 8¾c. Transactions on corresponding day in 1886 were 13,391 boxes ruling 6⅞c; in 1885 they were 12,684 ruling 7¾c.

LITTLE FALLS, N.Y., July 4.—Ruling price in this market, 8⅛c. Sales were 3,307 boxes at 8⅛c, 2,529 at 8¼c, 2,958 at 9c, 60 at 9⅛c, 139 at 9⅛c; 425 commission, 777 farm dairy. Total, 10,215.

Through the Whirlpool Rapids.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 5.—On Sunday Richard Cronan, while attempting to swim across the river at the Maid of the Mist landing, was caught in the current and carried down through the whirlpool rapids. Cronan came to the Falls from Boston about a week ago, and had been employed by Phillips & Young on the brewery addition. He boarded at Appleton's Empire House, and said when he left the house that he was going to take a bath. He was attempting to swim to the Canadian shore.

Smith's Falls to Montreal.

OTTAWA, July 5.—Information has been received by the C. P. R. authorities here that the Short Line Railway from Smith's Falls to Montreal will be open for traffic within three weeks. The trains between Toronto and Montreal will come round by Ottawa no longer, and it is said a train connecting at Smith's Falls will be run from this city. The Winnipeg trains will continue to run this way.

GOVERNMENT ATTACKED.

LONDON, July 5.—The Post renews its attack upon the Government. It objects to depriving private members of their rights. "The Government," says the Post, "is partly to blame for the delay of business. For months the Government has confiscated private rights without utilizing the time thus obtained. A commission of judges to try Irish cases is not needed. The Liberal-Unionists must accept more responsibility."

WORKING THE PRESS.

LONDON, July 5.—The Observer complains that it was given no opportunity to publish Mr. Gladstone's speech at Sir Joseph Pease's banquet on Saturday night. The Observer is the only newspaper printed in London on Sunday morning. It would have had a monopoly of the speech if ordinary methods had been followed. The speech was, however, withheld for publication simultaneously in all the papers. The Observer accuses Mr. Gladstone of paying too much attention to campaign methods of getting his utterances advertised, and also complains of the arbitrary course of the news associations. The other papers, however, jibe at the Observer, and unfeelingly remark that a paper which tries to gain an advantage over its rivals by publishing on the Sabbath should have enterprise enough to send a reporter of its own to the banquet. This, on the other hand, is rather sarcastic, as only two reporters were admitted, those of the two leading press associations, though the papers had representatives on the spot. That Mr. Gladstone knows how to work the press to the best advantage is clearly shown by this little episode.

REMARKABLE SUSPECTS.

LONDON, July 5.—Advices from Simla are that the Ameer of Afghanistan, suspecting lack of fidelity on the part of the Jamshedies near Herat, has imprisoned the Khan of that tribe and threatens to execute him unless his followers send their chiefs to Cabul as hostages. A number of the head men of the tribe have since this event gone over to the Russians.

BALFOUR ANSWERS HEALY.

LONDON, July 5.—Mr. Balfour, replying to Mr. Healy's charge of breach of faith in connection with the Crimes Bill, says the Government is still in favor of granting an appeal from sentence in all cases; that he found that the law already existing is fully adequate, and that further legislation is not needed.

THE ARMY AND THE CHURCH.

PARIS, July 5.—The Chamber of Deputies, by 317 to 211, yesterday rejected the proposal that priests be permitted to serve in the hospital ambulance instead of doing active army service. M. Rouvier requested the House to come to a decision on the bill as speedily as possible.

LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.

DUBLIN, July 5.—The Nationalists have unanimously nominated Mr. Sexton for Lord Mayor.

ANGLO-ITALIAN AGREEMENT.

VIENNA, July 5.—The Political Correspondeece says that England and Italy have agreed to make Raskasar, situated north of Seakial, the limit of their mutual surveillance on the coast of the Red Sea.

FREE FROM SUSPECTS.

LONDON, July 5.—The police officials and Irish detectives of Liverpool deny the reports of the existense there of a group of dynamiters. They say that Liverpool is now remarkably free from "suspects."

IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 5.—The Irish Land Bill was read the first time in the House of Commons last night, and the second reading was fixed for the 11th inst.

EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA.

LONDON, July 5.—The Empress of Austria is sojourning, by her physicians' advice, at the watering place of Cromer, in Norfolk.

LOYAL RIFLEMEN.

BERLIN, July 5.—The Emperor William has communicated to the German Rifle Association, which is celebrating its anniversary, his congratulations upon the faithfulness and loyalty always evinced by the riflemen.

THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 5.—Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, who was formerly Chief Secretary for Ireland, gave notice that he would introduce to-night, on the second reading of the Irish Land Bill, a motion that no land measure would be satisfactory which lacked such revision of the judicial rents as would meet the results of the fall in prices.

MR. PARNELL'S HEALTH.

DUBLIN, July 5.—At the fortnightly meeting of the Executive Committee of the National League, Dr. Kenny, Mr. Parnell's physician, made a speech denouncing the circulation of baseless and brutal reports about Mr. Parnell's health.

OUR EMPRESS.

LONDON, July 5.—Mr. Geo. Howell, a Liberal, announced to-night that he would call the attention of the House of Commons to the use of the title "Empress" in documents not affecting India, as contrary to the promises of the Ministers when Parliament conferred the title upon Her Majesty.

A HUMAN FRIEND.

VIENNA, July 5.—A man named Schemak has been arrested in Moravia, who has committed six murders, three great robberies and a large number of lesser thefts. He had in his possession a list of persons who were to have been murdered by himself and his associates, comprising the names of the wealthiest citizens of Moravia. Several of his companions in crime have also been arrested.

A MILITARY TRAIN.

PARIS, July 5.—A new and elaborate rail way train, intended for carrying sick and wounded with greater comfort, has been experimented with by military officials, the train being run to Havre and back.

ZEAL REBUKED.

LONDON, July 5.—Five hundred Orleanists, including many titled persons, paid a visit of homage to the Count of Paris on the Island of Jersey yesterday. The Count deprecated the demonstration and when a number of the visitors crowded around him and shouted "Vive de Roi," he ordered them to desist.

COUNT DE PARIS WARNED.

PARIS, July 5.—The Figaro asserts that the heir of a great kingdom (meaning the Crown Prince of Prussia) has visited the Count of Paris for the purpose of warning him that a Flouquet-Boulanger Ministry would mean war between France and Germany within a month after taking office. The Monarchic party will be based on that warning.

KATKOFF DYING.

LONDON, July 5.—A despatch from Moscow states that M. Katoff, the famous editor and statesman, is dying.

MGR. ROTELLI.

PARIS, July 5.—M. Flourens had a conference yesterday with M. Pelletan and M. Laguerre, leaders of the extreme left, regarding Mgr. Rotelli's action in attending the Baron de Mackau's reception. M. Flourens defended the Papal Nuncio's conduct. The left will meet to day to decide whether to pursue the matter further.

AN INDEMNITY.

LONDON, July 5.—The Portuguese have surrendered to the British and German consuls the Sultan's steamer Kilwa, seized during the dispute between Portugal and Zanzibar concerning the claims of the latter to Cape Delgardo. Portugal will also pay Zanzibar an indemnity.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

LONDON, July 5.—A reception in honor of the anniversary of American Independence was held yesterday in Grosvenor Place. Among the guests were Mr. Blaine, Consul-General Waller, Minister Phelps, Col. Cody, Mrs. Brown Potter, Henry Irving, and Messrs. Woodall, Reed, Patrick O'Brien Justin McCarthy and Justin H. McCarthy, M. P's.

MARTIAL LAW.

MADRID, July 5.—Martial law has been proclaimed in Valencia. Twenty-one persons were arrested for complicity in the rising against the collectors of the petrol tax yesterday.

A DYNAMITE CARTRIDGE

VIENNA, July 5.—During a drill at sappers at Jasz-Bereny, Hungary, yesterday, a dynamite cartridge exploded prematurely, killing twenty-seven, and injuring forty-eight others. Of the killed four were officers.

FOR THE WOUNDED.

PARIS, July 5.—A new and elaborate railroad train intended for carrying sick and wounded with greater comfort has been experimented with by French military officials, the train being run to Havre and back.

SHOOTING A NUISANCE.

LONDON, July 5.—An action has been instituted against the managers of the American Exhibition, to restrain the rifle shooting done by the Wild West Combination during their performances, the complainants alleging that the shooting is a nuisance.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.

ANTWERP, July 5.—A terrible explosion of naphtha took place to-day in a drug store in Antwerp. Ten persons were buried beneath the burning ruins. Three of the men were rescued, but they were badly injured.

MUTUAL CONCESSIONS.

LONDON, July 5.—Great Britain and Russia have made mutual concessions regarding the Afghan boundary questions, which, it is expected, will result in an early agreement between the two nations.

DROUGHT ENDED.

LONDON, July 5.—The drought that has prevailed for a month in the midland and northern counties was terminated last night by copious falls of rain.

M'GLYNNS' EXCOMMUNICATION.

It is Thought a Formal Bull Has Been Issued in His Case.

NEW YORK, July 5.—It has been generally reported that the excommunication of Dr. McGlynn would not be formal—that his failure to appear at Rome by July 2nd, the expiration of the forty days allowed him wherein to present himself at the Vatican, would operate ipso facto as an excommunication. According to the cable despatch, however, a formal bull of excommunication has been issued. There may be also formal ceremonies in the cathedral and other churches, although the ancient function of excommunication "by bell, book and candle," has fallen into desuetude in the practice of the Church.

Dr. McGlynn was to lecture in Milwaukee last night, and, before leaving New York, spoke with apparent indifference of the prospective fiat. His colleague, Mr. Henry George, in the last issue of his journal, referred to it in very contemptuous terms. The bull of excommunication will be awaited with great interest—most particularly, however, with reference to penalties which may be inflicted upon Roman Catholics who still openly sympathize with Dr. McGlynn and his action towards the Church. Many of the parish of St. Stephen's have expressed their intention to follow him to the extremest end, and the gathering at the last session of the Anti-Poverty Society expressed with great unanimity a like purpose.

The Daily Review

WEDNESDAY, JULY 6, 1887.

CANADA AND THE EMPIRE.

THE discussions, more or less informal, that have lately taken place in the Imperial Parliament show how greatly the construction of the C. P. R. is appreciated in the Mother Country as a benefit to the whole Empire. Though, as is very natural, the Administration and the Houses were not as yet prepared to rely solely upon the new route, to the complete abandonment of the old one, including the long tried Peninsula and Oriental Company's steamers, there appears to be a general consent that a mail should also be subsidized by way of Canada. Even those who seemed least favourable to this route did not fail to acknowledge the enterprise and public spirit of the people of this Dominion in the rapid construction of this stupendous work and its value in linking together the different portions of the Empire, while those best informed on the subject spoke of it and of Canada in terms of eulogium that must satisfy the most exacting.

Some members who were more especially interested in the British iron trade took occasion to refer to the new iron duties as an unfriendly step, but even they admitted that it would not warrant them in refusing a mail subsidy, and this feeling was strengthened by the explanation of those better acquainted with Canada and its policy that the iron duties were not aimed at the mother country but were due to the justifiable motive of establishing so important an industry in the Dominion. That was accepted, even if reluctantly, as a sufficient reason why Canada should thus act for its own advancement, but the Butterworth-Wiman suggestion that we should assume a hostile position to the British iron producers, not to raise up a great industry in Canada, but to favour the United States by obtaining our iron from them, would not have been so acceptible, for it would mean an attitude of preference for the foreigner and antagonism to our own countrymen beyond the seas.

The successful construction of our great railway and its acknowledged value to the whole Empire, throws some light upon the difficulty put forth by those who do not favour closer connection between the different parts of the Empire, that this Dominion and the Colonies would be called upon to contribute to Imperial ends. We have so contributed. We have been constructing our great transcontinental railway to knit together the various parts of the Dominion and to develop its undeveloped portions, but while so working for ourselves and obtaining an ample recompense within our own borders, we have admittedly benefitted the Empire as a whole. So it has been in a lesser degree with our expenditure on our other railways and our water ways, on our citizen army for self-defence and with our other manifestations of a national policy; while building up the Dominion we have also been building up the Empire. And by similar methods we can continue to do so without sacrificing our autonomy.

The appreciation shown for our great railway is by no means confined to our fellow subjects. To say nothing of other countries, the people of the United States fully recognise its importance, even though instead of gratulation there is some envy and antagonism. It is only in Canada that people are unfortunately found who persistently seize every opportunity of belittling and thwarting, of sneering at and obstructing our great national policy of utilizing and developing our magnificent natural resources.

THE London Advertiser has at last explained its sudden change of base in first clamouring for the execution of Riel and then clamouring for vengeance because he was executed. It seems that our contemporary thought Riel should be amendable to the law till it saw that the Government would not allow him to escape the punishment of his crimes. When, however, he was found by jurors, judges and experts to be sane and had been executed, the Advertiser came to the conclusion that he was insane and that the Administration should be overturned for enforcing the decision of the courts.

Beneficial Insects.

Beetles are not the only beneficial insects by any means; by far the greater number are found among the Hymenoptera. This order includes the parasitic Ichneumonflies, which range all the way from flies an inch or more in length, to minute species scarcely visible to the naked eye. The larger kinds deposit only one egg in each victim, while some of the smaller leave their entire complement of eggs on one caterpillar. A well-known example, which is familiar to most gardeners, may be found in the Tomato-worm. A small, black, microgaster fly goes peering about among the tomato-vines until it espies a worm on which it lays its eggs. These soon hatch and the tiny larvæ eat their way into the worm and are soon thickly packed between the skin and vital organs, where they eat all the substance that would otherwise go to make the future moth, and their presence does not prevent the worm from eating and growing until the little parasites are full-fed, when they eat their way out of their host, and each stands on end and spins for itself a tiny white cocoon. Sometimes these cocoons are so numerous that the back of the worm is almost entirely covered with them, and now it shrivels and rapidly shrinks in size and soon dies. And this work of destruction is constantly going on all around us. Were it not for these parasites, vegetation could scarcely exist on the earth.—American Agriculturist.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

A GREAT INDUSTRY.

Whether Mr. Kamper will succeed in purchasing the Intercolonial or not is a question that has still to be settled, but this in no wise alters the fact that the attention of capitalists has been drawn to the immense mineral resources of the Province and that in a very short time large smelting works, utilizing our coal, and giving employment to thousands of workmen, will be in operation.—Halifax Critic.

THE HOME MARKET.

Large quantities of canned beans, peas, corn and tomatoes are consumed in Manitoba and the Territories, all of which could be prepared at home. In meats there should certainly be an unlimited supply, and these also are largely used in a canned state, throughout the country. In fruits the prospect for supply is not so favorable, though even in this branch many varieties of small fruit could be produced here to good advantage.—Winnipeg Commercial.

ALL NINETEEN OF THEM.

Nineteen men, the other day, at Hamilton, voted for commercial union, and it has gone forth that that the farmers at Wentworth are largely in favor of that idea. There are probably four thousand farmers in Wentworth. That is surprisingly like the famous three tailors, who presumed to speak for the empire of Great Britain. —Chatham Planet.

WHERE TO WORK.

Congressman Benjamin Butterworth and Sir Erastus Wiman, who are now in Canada and have been making speeches there in favor of commercial union with the United states, are engaged in an excellent cause, but it strikes us that the bulk of the missionary work is to be done on this side of the border.—New York World.

THEIR REAL OBJECT.

If Canada wants free trade with this great country she can get it, once and for all, by casting in her lot with ours. Nobody who has any sense would strike a blow to annex her territory to ours; but when the Canadian people, kindred to us in blood and language, and living in a land which nature has made a part of ours, wish to become incorporated with this great Republic, they will be cordially welcomed; and we may confidently affirm that they will never secure permanent free trade with us until that movement occurs. — Philadelphia Textile Record.

POLITICAL MACHINES.

The activity of Farmers' Institutes in favor of commercial union threatens to give the movement a formidable look. But it also looks as if the Farmers' Institute was to be, from the day of its birth, an improved political machine. It is timed to arrive with the greatest mechanical exactness. A repeater resolution comes from it with great certainty, every time it moves. The new machine works automatically, and is the best of modern repeaters. Are these resolutions sent from the central mill to be ground out anew, as so many originals? This used to be a favorite way of getting up petitions to the legislature, and the deception of the mechanical device became so apparent that Parliament found it necessary to reject printed petitions. By machine methods, a joint stock agitation becomes one of the simplest things in the world. But it cannot be said that this mode of political "hustling" commands much respect.—Monetary Times.

AT NEW YORK NINE CENTS.

The first shipment of cheese from the Manitou factory was made on Monday last. The product consisted of about fourteen hundred pounds, and was consigned to Messrs. G. F. & J. Galt, Winnipeg, at fourteen cents a pound.—Manitou Mercury.

OUR ZOLLVEREIN CUSTOMS HOUSES

It can be proven that the Government officials in New York are allowing importers to defraud the revenue, and to injure our home manufactures. This is the crying evil of our tariff at the hands of the Free Traders who now control the Treasury Department. They are not able to make laws after their own ideas, but they are able to wink at evasions of the law in this undervaluation business. A few men in the penitentiary will be the best remedy.—Boston Advertiser.

GIVES IT AWAY.

The Globe says that under commercial union we should and would appoint a corps of officers to prevent the importation of American oleomargarine to compete against Canadian butter. This would not give unrestricted reciprocity, neither would it do away with the necessity of employing customs officers. The more the Globe argues this question the more it gives its case away.—Toronto World (Indep.)

SHOW THE GRIEVANCE.

Manitoba has other remedies within her power, if she be suffering from excessive railway rates. She can appeal to the Privy Council for a reduction. That she has not done, she must be aware, is being used against her; and the plea is set up that her inaction arises from the consciousness that rates are not, by comparison, excessive, and the alleged grievance of want of railway connection with the States is purely artificial. To onlookers, from a distance, it does seem that this objection ought to be met in the only way in which it can be successfully dealt with. Manitoba owes it to herself to show that the grievance of which she makes so much is substantial, and not the artificial creation of railway promoters in league with a foreign corporation not over scrupulous as to the means it uses to accomplish its end of carrying off the traffic of our North-West.—Monetary Times.

WIT AND WISDOM.

Never despise humble services. When large ships run aground, little boats may pull them off.

Married couples resemble a pair of shears so joined that they cannot be separated, often moving in opposite directions, yet always punishing anyone who comes between them.

Do not always search for the serious side of things. The man who has no eye nor ear for the ludicrous is an unhappy mortal. Next to virtue, the fun in the world is what we can least spare.

Count life a stage upon thy way,
And follow conscience, come what may;
Alike with heaven and earth sincere,
With hand and brow and bosom clear;
"Fear God," and know no other fear.

"Ephra'm, does de good book say dat we are made ob de dust?" "Yes, Augustus—yes, sah. And dat we must return to de dust." "Yah! yah! ya! is dat so? Well, den, I guess it must be coal dust."

A witness who was asked the other day how he knew that a certain man and woman were husband and wife, replied, "Acos I've offn heard the lady blow the gentleman up." The evidence was held to be conclusive.

Wife, to sick husband—"A gentleman downstairs, John, wishes to see you." Sick husband—"I'm too ill to see anyone." Wife—"It's the minister, John." Sick husband—"Well, I'm not ill enough to see him yet."

A GENT one day while proceeding hurredly through a narrow lane leading to a railway station, asked in passing a native of the North, "What o'clock is it, please?" "She couldna say," replied Tonald, "she's a stranger here."

If there is a man that can eat his bread at peace with heaven and man, it is that man who has brought that bread out of the earth by his own honest industry. It is cankered by no fraud—it is wet by no tear—it is stained by no blood.

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

CHAPTER XIX.

HANS CORTZEE COMES TO PRETORIA.

When once he had taken the turn, John's recovery was rapid. Naturally of a vigorous constitution, when the artery had fairly united he soon made up for the great loss of blood which he had undergone, and a little more than a month from the date of his wound was, physically, almost as good a man as ever.

One morning—it was the 20th of March—Jess and he were sitting in "The Palatial" garden. John was lying in a long cane deck chair that Jess had borrowed or stolen out of one of the deserted houses, and smoking a pipe.

They sat in silence; John puffing away at his pipe, and Jess, her work—one of his socks—lying idly upon her knees, with her hands clasped over it and her eyes fixed upon the lights and shadows that played with broad fingers upon the wooded slopes beyond.

John finished his pipe, and, although she did not know it, was watching her face, which, now that she was off her guard, was no longer impassive, but seemed to mirror the tender and glorious hope that was floating through her mind. Her lips were slightly parted, and her wide eyes were full of a soft, strange light, while on the whole countenance was a look of eager thought and spiritualized desire such as he had known portrayed in ancient masterpieces upon the face of the virgin mother. Jess was not, except as regards her eyes and hair, even a good looking person. But at that moment John thought that her face was touched with a diviner beauty than he had yet seen on the face of woman. It thrilled him and appealed to him, not as Bessie's beauty had appealed, but to that other side of his nature, of which Jess alone could turn the key. Her face was more like the face of a spirit than a human being's, and it almost frightened him to see it.

"Jess," he said at last, "what are you thinking of?"

She started, and her face resumed its normal air. It was as though a mask had been suddenly set upon it.

"Why do you ask?" she said.

"Because I want to know. I never saw you look like that before."

She laughed a little.

"You would think me foolish if I told you what I was thinking about. Never mind, it has gone wherever thoughts go. I will tell you what I am thinking about now, which is—that it is about time we got out of this place. My uncle and Bessie will be half distracted."

"We've had more than two months of it now. The relieving column can't be far off," suggested John; for these foolish people in Pretoria labored under a firm belief that one fine morning they would be gratified with the sight of the light dancing down a long line of British bayonets, and of Boers evaporating in every direction like storm clouds before the sun.

Jess shook her head. She was beginning to lose faith in relieving columns that never came.

"If we don't help ourselves, my opinion is that we may stop here till we are starved out, which we pretty well are. However, it's no use talking about it, so I'm off to get our rations. Let's see, have you got everything you want?"

"Everything, thanks."

"Well, then, mind you stop quiet till I come back."

"Why," laughed John, "I am as strong as a horse."

"Possibly; but that is what the doctor said, you know. Good-bye!" And Jess took her big basket and started on what John used to feebly call her "rational undertaking."

She had not got fifty paces from the door before she suddenly caught sight of a familiar form seated on a familiar pony. The form was fat and jovial looking, and the pony was small but also fat. It was Hans Coetzee—none other!

Jess could hardly believe her eyes. Old Hans in Pretoria! What could it mean?

"Om Coetzee! Om Coetzee!" she called, as he came ambling past her, evidently making for the Heidelberg road.

The old Boer pulled up his pony, and gazed around him in a mystified way.

"Here, Om Coetzee! Here!"

"Allemachter!" he said, jerking his pony round. "It's you, Missie Jess, is it? Now who would have thought of seeing you here!"

"Who would have thought of seeing you here!" she answered.

"Yes, yes; it seems strange; I dare say that it seems strange. But I am a messenger of peace, like Uncle Noah's dove in the ark, you know. The fact is," and he glanced round to see if anybody were listening, "I have been sent by the government to arrange about an exchange of prisoners."

"The government! What government?"

"What government? Why, the triumvirate, of course—whom may the Lord bless and prosper as he did Jonah when he walked on the wall of the city."

"Joshua, when he walked round the wall of the city," suggested Jess. "Jonah walked down the whale's throat."

"Ah! to be sure, so he did, and blew a trumpet inside. I remember now; though I am sure I don't know how he did it. The fact is that our glorious victories have quite confused me. Ah! what a thing it is to be a patriot! The dear Lord makes strong the arm of the patriot, and takes care that he hits his man well in the middle."

"You have turned wonderfully patriotic all of a sudden, Om Coetzee," said Jess, tartly.

"Yes, missie, yes; I am a patriot to the bone of my back. I hate the English government; d—n the English government! Let us have our land back and our volksraad. Almighty! I saw who was in the right at Laing's Nek there. Ah, those poor rooibaatjes! I shot four of them myself; two as they came up and two as they ran away, and the last one went head over heels like a buck. Poor man! I cried for him afterward. I did not like going to fight at all, but Frank Muller sent to me and said that if I did not go he would have me shot. Ah, he is a devil of a man, that Frank Muller! So I went, and when I saw how the dear Lord had put it into the heart of the English general to be a bigger fool even that day than he is every day, and to try and drive us out of Laing's Nek with a thousand of his poor rooibaatjes, then, I tell you, I saw where the right lay, and I said, 'D—n the English government! What is the English government doing here?' and after Ingogo I said it again."

"Never mind all that, Om Coetzee," broke in Jess. "I have heard you tell a different tale before, and perhaps you will again. Tell me, how are my uncle and my sister? Are they at the farm?"

"Almighty! you don't suppose that I have been there to see, do you? But, yes, I have heard they are there. It is a nice place, that Mooifontein, and I think that I shall buy it when we have turned all you English people out of the land. Frank Muller told me that they were there. And now I must be getting on, or that devil of a man, Frank Muller, will want to know what I have been about."

"Om Coetzee," said Jess, "will you do something for me? We are old friends, you know, and I once persuaded my uncle to lend you £500 when all your oxen died of the lungsick."

"Yes, yes, it shall be paid back one day—when we have got the d—d Englishmen out of the country." And he began to gather up his reins preparatory to riding off.

"Will you do me a favor?" said Jess, catching the pony by the bridle.

"What is it? What is it, missie? I must be getting on. That devil of a man, Frank Muller, is waiting for me with the prisoners at the Rooihuis Kraal."

"I want a pass for myself and Capt. Niel, and an escort. We want to get down home."

The old Boer held up his fat hands in amazement.

"Almighty!" he said, "it is impossible. A pass—who ever heard of such a thing? Come, I must be going."

"It is not impossible, Uncle Coetzee, as you know," said Jess. "Listen! If I get that pass I will speak to my uncle about the £500. Perhaps he would not want it all back again."

"Ah!" said the Boer. "Well, we are old friends, missie, and 'never desert a friend,' that is my saying. Almighty! I will ride a hundred miles—I will swim through blood for a friend. Well, well, I will see. It will depend upon that devil of a man, Frank Muller. Where are you to be found—in the white house yonder? Good. To-morrow the escort will come in with the prisoners, and if I can get it they will bring the pass. But, missie, remember the £500. If you do not speak to your uncle about that I shall be even with him. Almighty! what a thing it is to have a good heart and to love to help your friends! Well, good day, good day," and off he cantered on his fat pony, his broad face shining with a look of unutterable benevolence.

Jess cast a look of contempt after him and then went on toward the camp to fetch the rations.

When she got back to "The Palatial" she told John what had taken place, and suggested that it would be as well, in case there should be a favorable reply to her request, to have everything prepared for a start, and accordingly the cart was brought down and stood outside "The Palatial," and John unscrewed the patent caps and filled them with castor oil, and ordered Mouti to keep the horses, which were all well, though "poor" from want of proper food, well within hail.

Meanwhile, old Hans pursued the jerky tenor of his way for an hour or so, till he came in sight of a small red house.

Presently, from the shadow in front of the red house emerged a horseman, mounted on a powerful black horse. The horseman—a stern, handsome, bearded man—put his hand about his eyes to shade them from the sun, and gazed up the road. Then he seemed to suddenly strike his spurs into the horse, for the animal gave a sudden bound forward, and came sweeping towards Hans at a hand gallop.

"Ah! it is that devil of a man, Frank Muller!" ejaculated Hans. "Now I wonder what he wants? I always feel cold down the back when he comes near me."

By this time the plunging black horse was being reined up alongside of his pony so sharply that it reared till its great hoofs were pawing the air within a few inches of Hans' head.

"Almighty!" said the old man, tugging his pony round. "Be careful, nephew, be careful; I do not wish to be crushed like a beetle."

Frank Muller—for it was he—smiled. He had made his horse rear purposely, in order to frighten the old man, whom he knew to be an arrant coward.

"Why have you been so long? and what have you done with the Englishmen? You should have been back half an hour ago."

"And so I should, nephew, and so I should, if I had not been detained. Surely you do not suppose that I would linger in the accursed place? Bah!" and he spat upon the ground, "it stinks of Englishmen. I cannot get the taste of them out of my mouth."

"Your are a liar, Uncle Coetzee," was the cool answer. "English with the English, Boer with the Boer. You blow neither hot nor cold. Be careful lest we show you up. I know you and your talk. Do you remember what you were saying to the Englishman Niel in the inn yard at Wakkerstroom when you turned and saw me? I heard, and I do not forget. You know what happens to a 'land betrayer?'"

Hans' teeth positively chattered, and his florid face blanched with fear.

"What do you mean, nephew?" he asked.

"I—ah!—I mean nothing. I was only speaking a word of warning to you as a friend. I have heard things said about you by"—and he dropped his voice and whispered a name at the sound of which poor Hans turned whiter than ever.

"Well," went on his tormentor, when he had sufficiently enjoyed his terror, "what sort of terms did you make in Pretoria?"

"Oh, good, nephew, good," he gabbled, delighted to get on a fresh subject. "I found the Englishmen supple as a tanned skin. They will give up their twelve prisoners for our four. The men are to be in by 10 to-morrow. I told their commandant about Laing's Nek and Ingogo, and he would not believe me. He thought I lied like himself. They are getting hungry there now. I saw a Hottentot I knew there, and he told me that their bones were beginning to show."

"They will be through the skin before long," muttered Frank. "Well, here we are at the house. The general is there. He has just come up from Heidelberg, and you can make your report to him. Did you find out about the Englishman—Capt. Niel? Is it true that he is dead?"

"No, he is not dead. By the way, I met Om Croft's niece—the dark one. She is shut up there with the captain, and she begged me to try and get them a pass to go home. Of course I told her that it was nonsense, and that they must stop and starve with the others."

Muller, who had been listening to this last piece of information with intense interest, suddenly checked his horse and answered:

"Did you? Then you are a bigger fool than I thought you. Who gave you authority to decide whether they should have a pass or not?"

CHAPTER XX.

THE GREAT MAN.

Completely overcome by this last remark, Hans collapsed like a jelly-fish out of water, and reflected in his worthless old heart that Frank Muller was indeed "a devil of a man." By this time they had reached the door of the little house and were dismounting, and in another minute Hans found himself in the presence of one of the leaders of the rebellion.

He was a short, ugly man of about 55, with a big nose, small eyes, straight hair and a stoop. The forehead, however, was good, and the whole face betrayed a keenness and ability far beyond the average. The great man was seated at a plain deal table, writing something with evident difficulty upon a dirty sheet of paper, and smoking a very large pipe.

"Sit, heeren, sit," he said when they entered, waving the stem of his pipe toward a deal bench. Accordingly they sat down without even removing their hats, and, pulling out their pipes, proceeded to light them.

"How, in the name of God, do you spell 'excellency?'" asked the general, presently. "I have spelled it in four different ways, and each one looks worse than the last."

Frank Muller gave the required information. Hans in his heart thought he spelled it wrong, but he did not dare to say so. Then came another pause, only interrupted by the slow scratching of a quill across the dirty paper, during which Hans nearly went to sleep; for the weather was very hot, and he was tired with his ride.

"There!" said the writer, presently, gazing at his handwriting with an almost childish air of satisfaction, "that is done. A curse on the man who invented writing! Our fathers did very well without it; why should not we? Though, to be sure, it is useful for treaties with the Kaffirs. I don't believe you have told me right now about that 'excellency,' nephew. Well, it will have to serve. When a man writes such a letter as that to the representative of the English queen he needn't mind his spelling; it will be swallowed with the rest," and he leaned back in his chair and laughed softly.

"Well, Memheer Coetzee, what is it? Ah, I know; the prisoners. Well, what did you do?"

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

Erastus Wiman.

This prominent advocate of Commercial Union will not likely visit our town, but it is a very sure thing that Rowse's Trade Merrilleaux at 65c is as good as other houses sell at $1. Call and see them.

Died.

An idiot infant, whose father and mother are also idiots, died in the gaol on Monday. The family were residents of Dummer Township and were committed to the gaol some months ago.

Peterborough Presbytery.

A meeting of the Peterborough Presbytery was held at Port Hope on Tuesday. The Presbytery went into session at 10 a.m. and adjourned at 6 p m. The usual amount and character of business was transacted.

Great Excitement.

Hundreds shot into that Cheap Cash Store on George street known as Rowse's Trade Palace, and bought $1 silks for 65c. Dress goods at half price and $3 parasols for $1.50. Their cheap goods astonish everybody.

LADIES' low shoes in the most beautiful style at KIDD's.

Board of Education.

Only five members of the Board of Education turned up on Tuesday evening to attend the meeting, Messrs. Burnham, A. Rutherford, Errett, stratton and the chairman. They went across the street and enjoyed the band concert in the Gardens.

Peterborough Rangers.

The Canada Gazette announces the following promotion:—"57th Battalion, Peterborough Rangers, No. 1 Company, Peterborough.—To be 2nd lieutenant provisionally, Sergt. Ernest Fred Mason, vice Rogers, whose resignation is accepted."

Band Concert.

The Fire Brigade Band played to about two thousand people in the Gardens on Tuesday evening. The grounds were beautifully illuminated by the electric light tower. The flower beds under Mr. Blade's constant care are looking prettier than ever.

Scott Act.

In the absence of P. M. Dumble, County P. M. Edmison occupied the red chair at the Police Court this morning. Three Scott Act cases were on the docket, Queen vs. Morgan, Queen vs. Clancy and Queen vs. Halpin. A plea of guilty was entered in the first named case and a fine of $100 imposed. The other two were adjourned for a week.

The Concert.

The Listemann-Kellogg concert, which is to take place on the evening of July 13th, under the auspices of the Lansdowne Rowing Club, is creating quite a stir of interest. Though the plan has been opened only three days over a hundred seats are taken. The plan of the hall is at Hartley's. 1d4

Cigar Business.

Mr. Hugh Quirk, who has been a citizen of Peterborough for the last three years, has disposed of his interest in the Peterborough Cigar Factory to Mr. D. C. Miller, who will henceforth conduct the business. Mr. Miller is a practical cigar maker, thoroughly understands the business, and should build up a good trade. Mr. Quirk intends going to Toronto.

Personal.

Mr. J. G. Early has returned home again. He has spent the last month or two in England.

Mr. Henry Denne is on his way to England to visit a brother who is ill.

The twenty-seventh annual convention of the Ontario Teacher's Association will be held in Toronto on August 9th, 10th and 11th. Mr. Jas. Coyle Brown, County School Inspector will deliver an address on "School Classification."

Cheese.

The regular fortnightly meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board was held on Tuesday afternoon in the market building. About forty representatives of factories and buying houses were present. The cable stood at 47 shillings. The buyers present were: Messrs. W. H. Wrighton, Wm. Gluxton, E. Green and Geo. Fitzgerald, Peterborough; J. D. Flavelle, and H. Leary, Lindsay; Mr. Brentnell, Guelph; Messrs. Hodgson and Bird, Montreal, and Mr. W. Cook, Belleville. The offer was as follows:

Factory.	No of Boxes.
Lakehurst	46
Keene	234
Warmister	185
Westwood	—
Warsaw	—
Lakefield	—
Norwood	—
North Smith	150
Trewern	—
South Dummer	170
Central Smith	75
Central	55
Shearer	95
Otonabee Union	70
Myrtle	71
Melrose Abbey	—
Glenthorn	57
Pine Grove	—
VICTORIA SECTION.
Downeyville	90
Reaboro	70
Bobcaygeon	—
West Ops	60
North Ops	45
Cambrey	60
Starr	120

The bids were as follows:—Wrighton, 8¾ for the board; Leary, 8¾ for the board; Cook, 9 for selections; Leary, 9 for the board; Wrighton, 9 1-16 for the board; Cook, 9¼ for Peterborough section; Brentnell, 9 1-16 for the Lindsay section. The factories were called off and all sold. A discussion took place on the right of factories to sell their cheese before board day. Several buyers threatened to quit the board if such practices were allowed. Mr. Wrighton introduced a document for the salesmen to sign, setting forth that anyone found guilty hereafter would be liable to a fine and expulsion from the board. The fine was fixed at $25 and the term of expulsion at two months. Those factories which sold before the board meeting were caught. They sold at from 8¾ to 9, while the price paid on the board was 9¼.

While the board was in session considerable fun was caused by the irrepressible gentleman representing Downeyville. When a sixteenth more was offered for Peterborough leaving Lindsay ⅛ behind, he made a vigerous speech declaring that nothing less than an ⅛ bid should be allowed. He got into a wrangle with Mr. Cook, and the Chairman, amid roars of laughter, had to call him to order seven times before quiet was restored. The representative for Starr was very reluctant at accepting a sixteenth under Peterborough, but on Mr. Brentnell declaring that he would withdraw his bid he finally took it.

THE CHEESE MARKETS.

The Montreal market reports of June 17th state that on the previous day the ruling price for cheese was 9¼ cents, the Liverpool cable quotations being 52s 6d, and the New York market quotations being 9¼ cents. On the same day at Belleville, Ont., large sales of factory cheese were made at 9 @ 9¼ cents; at Brockville at 8¾ @ 8¾ cents, and at Peterborough 1,715 boxes were sold at 9¼ cents. Bradstreet's of June 18th, reporting the New York cheese market of the previous day, says that the export call there was less satisfactory, due in part to the very liberal shipments being made from Montreal (for the week about 50,000 boxes), with freight rates thence by steam to Liverpool the same as from New York; the quotations for best factory cheese being 9¼ @ 9¾ cents. Alas for the poor hopeless and helpless farmers of Canada! On the very day that best factory New York cheese was selling at New York city for 9¼ cents, Canadian cheese was selling in Belleville, Peterborough and other cheese-making centres at the same price, and the amount of business being done at Montreal, and the prevailing prices there, having a depressing effect on the trade in New York city. What good could possibly accrue to Canadian cheese makers from Commercial Union anyhow?—Canadian Manufacturer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

So far as ascertained at present the business of the country for the fiscal year just ended is in a most prosperous condition. The Postoffice Department and the Patent Office both show large increases in revenue compared with the previous year.

The complaint against the ugliness of the English coinage is so general and strong that Mr. Boehm, the sculptor who modelled the head, in self-defence explains that he made a good effigy, but the Queen personally insisted on the alterations which have so offended the public eye.

Said an Irishman to a telegraph clerk, "Do you charge for the address in a message?" "No," replied the operator. "And do you charge a man for signing his name, sir?" "No, Sir." "Weel, thin, I jist want me brother to know I'm here, an' so will ye plase send this:—"To John M'Flinn, at New York—signed, Patrick M'Flinn?"

Capt. d'Almeida, a naval officer of Portugal and member of the Chamber of Deputies at Lisbon, hit the Minister of Marine a blow on the nose during a heated debate in Parliament. He was at once arrested and confined in one of the war ships in the harbour.

Young clergyman, only a few months ordained, to member of his congregation—"Well, Mr. Thomas, I observe that your son is never at church now. What's wrong? Are my sermons too deep for him?" Mr. Thomas—"No, no, sir—quite the opposite, I can assure you—quite the opposite." The clerical umbrella is turned round, the clerical dog is whistled to, and a felt hat disappears round the corner.

Among the begging letters recently received at the office of a benevolent society was one running thus:—"This unfortunate young man is the only son of a widow, who died childless, and his earnings maintain his aged father and infant brothers, whose sole support he is." The secretary of the bureau wrote on the margin of the epistle the following note:—"The circumstances of this case are evidently exaggerated."

GREAT RISK OF QUEBEC

TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION RAGING IN THE OLD CITADEL.

Fears of the Magazine Exploding—Bombshells bursting—The Flames Checked at Last—The Latest Intelligence.

QUEBEC, July 6.—Between eleven and twelve o'clock a fire broke out in the Citadel in a row of stone structures on the right hand side of the alley beside the main entrance, or what is supposed to be the barracks. The flames quickly spread to the buildings inside the Citadel grounds, and grave fears that they may reach the magazine are felt.

At 12 o'clock a loud booming could be heard, but whether an explosion or an attempt to blow up the other portion of the buildings cannot be ascertained, as all approach is cut off by the intense heat and flames. The fire at midnight covered two or three hundred yards of the length of the buildings facing the entrance. There is great consternation among the residents of Cape and St. Louis streets. The city is lit up as bright as from the sun's rays. People are flocking from all directions, and it takes almost superhuman efforts on the part of the police to keep them back from running their heads into danger. The city fire brigade at the present time are unable to cope with the flames.

12.30 a. m.—All the available force in the battery are blowing up buildings. The trumpeter is now sounding the danger call and for all hands to keep clear.

THE LATEST PARTICULARS.

The conflagration is more serious than was at first reported. It is said to have originated in the cavalry stables on the north-east corner of the citadel at about 11.30 p. m. All the horses to the number of about twenty-six were either burned or suffocated before any assistance could arrive. The loud neighing and fierce kicking of the poor brutes was heart rending. The stables are elevated ones and made it all the more difficult to get at. The fire from this point spread to the western portion of the frontage and speedily made its way towards the main entrance, destroying in its course ammunition waggons, guns, "the great field forge," built for such campaigns as the North-West, innumerable stores, etc. The fire then made its way across the main entrance, and is now burning to the western extremity of the block, which outsiders will remember is where they enter the Citidel.

A number of small bombs, which were before reported as an attempt to blow up the building, are actually exploding and the worst fears are entertained. A large quantity has blown up. As I now write a bomb has exploded which shakes the whole building in which I am now, known as the officers' quarters. The most timid of the citizens are fleeing from the city as fast as vehicles can carry them with jaded horses.

It is hard now to say what will be the result. An officer who has now entered says it is "duced risky, but if the wind holds steady for half an hour we may prevent it from reaching the magazine, as the fire will have a chance of burning itself out."

THE FIRE STILL RAGING.

Sir. A. P. Caron, who was in the city, was speedily on the spot and worked like a Trojan, rendering most valuable advice to the officers and men in their heroic efforts to subdue the fire. At 1.30 the fire is still raging. One man is reported to be missing. His name is said to be Harrison, but it is not known for certain whether his life has been lost.

UNDER CONTROL.

Special to the Review.

QUEBEC, July 7.—The fire which broke out in the stables of the Citidel near midnight last night, was got under control at three o'clock this morning, and the excited citizens who had feared a terrible conflagration, sought their homes.

It is estimated that the total loss will reach $150,000, on which there is not a dollar of insurance.

How the fire originated has not yet been discovered, but it is probable that all the information will be ascertained at a meeting which the military authorities will hold shortly.

GENUINE French goat boots for ladies' at KIDD'S for $1.75 per pair.

TERRIFIC DESCENT.

A Perilous Jump From an Elevation of 5,000 Feet.

QUINCY, Ill., July 5.—A thrilling performance was enacted here yesterday as the principal attraction of the celebration. Tim Baldwin, the aeronaut, was advertised to jump from a captive balloon at an elevation of 2,000 feet. At a few minutes past 4 o'clock Baldwin jumped into the basket. The balloon was cut loose and rose gradually into the air, carried eastward by the wind. When about 2,000 feet high Baldwin grasped the rings of the parachute which hung from the netting and gave the lines a shake, straightening them out. He parted the ropes between the ring and the basket and steadied himself for the leap.

The balloon in the meantime had reached an altitude of 4,500 feet. The watching thousands were giving up, and in a few moments more would have started home. Another movement is visible in the balloon. The cotton of the parachute is shaking in the wind, and interest in Baldwin and the balloon is again excited.

The plucky man has jumped. For a hundred feet he drops like lead. The parachute partially fills and the next hundred feet the velocity is decreased. The crowd holds its breath. Not a sound is heard. Every eye is turned on the man suspended in air hanging by his hands four thousand feet above the earth. He shakes his foot, the crowd takes it as a signal and a huzza breaks forth that might have encouraged the plucky man in his perilous descent. He now travels at a slower pace, though the parachute has not filled. The cords are tangled and though the speed is slackened the parachute careens in its downward course and the tired aeronaut aways with his umbrella.

In three minutes and twenty seconds after leaving his balloon Baldwin's feet strike terra firma. The rope strings about his wrists relax an instant and then tighten as the wind catches the parachute and turns him over a couple of times before he is able to release his hands. With a quick movement the parachute collapses, leaving him prostrate for a moment after the most perilous aerial voyage ever chronicled, and two miles from his starting-point. When Baldwin left the balloon it was at an altitude of 5,000 feet and a mile east of his starting-point.

THE EASTERN PROBLEM.

Russia Still the Terror of Europe—A Bulgarian Ruler.

LONDON, July 6.—The Bulgarian Sobranje has once more assembled to renew its futile efforts to elect a Prince of Bulgaria who will be permitted to ascend the throne and govern the principality by all the Powers. The Prince who may be elected by the Sobranje as the honest choice of that body, will, of course, stand no chance of assuming the rulership of the country in view of the enormous strength of the opposition exercised by Russia. The Czar will not for a moment recognize the rights of a candidate recommended by England or Austria or both. The other powers will certainly object to the selection of a ruler whose sole claim to that doubtful honor rests upon the recommendation of Russia. The election of a candidate enjoying the favor of the Sultan of Turkey is out of the question, and it is difficult to see how an indefinite prolongation of the deadlock can be averted, or how the question can be ultimately settled except by arbitration or war. Russia's intention after having determined long ago that the Bulgarian question must be determined by war, patent to every acute observer of her course, is that the rising of the smoke of battle from the hills and valleys of Bulgaria shall discover that country an integral part of the Russian empire, and the large numbers of Russian troops stationed at various points within distance from Bulgaria soil easily covered in from six to twenty-four hours, attest the gravity of that intention. It will therefore be seen that the action of the Sobranje can have no effect in bringing about a settlement of the Balkan question, except as furnishing a pretext for warlike demonstration or actual conflict. The recent cementing of the relations between Italy and England into what may be considered as an alliance, has caused the circulation of a rumor that the two powers have concluded a secret treaty for concentrated offensive and defensive purposes to offset the effect of an alliance between France and Turkey, the consumation of which seems most probable.

THE JUBILEE JOKER.

Four Hundred Silver Cradles not Yet Handed Over—Indignant Mothers.

LONDON, July 5.—The wag of the Jubilee has turned up, and all England is laughing over his success. He caused the circulation all through the country of the report that every baby born on Jubilee day would receive a present of a silver cradle and six guineas, or about $31, from the Queen. It caused the greatest excitement among the mothers of the land, and they have been writing and coming to Buckingham Palace until 400 have already responded. What lent it probability is the fact that the Queen, although stingy as a rule, has generally sent $15 to every mother in England or Scotland who brought triplets into the world. One proud mother who appeared at Buckingham Palace with twins was especially aggrieved, as she considered that, like Mrs. Chick, she had made "an effort" to honour Her Majesty's jubilee and should not be defrauded of her cradles and her cash. She would, she said, change the babies' names, which had been selected for her by a local schoolmaster, the boy being called Jubilo and the girl Jubila Higgins. The officials disclaim all knowledge of the matter and hesitate to tell the Queen about it.

A jubilee cairn has been raised on the top of Ben Ledi by the Highlanders in the district. A message was sent to Her Majesty to the following effect:—"Loyal Highlanders by the sides of Loch Lubnaig and Loch Vennachar, and of Glenfinlas, climbed Ben Ledi and erected on the summit of the hill a Jubilee Memorial Cairn, 14 feet high. It was christened 'The Victoria Jubilee Cairn, and the health of Her Majesty was enthusiastically pedged."

EVICTIONS IN WICKLOW.

Barricades and Fortifications—Warlike Appearance of Things—The Landlord.

DUBLIN, July 6.—Eviction preparations began yesterday on the Brooke estate, at Coolgraney, near Arklow, in the extreme north of County Wexford, where seventy eviction writs are out. Seven hundred soldiers and police, with waggons to convey reinforcements, were drafted into Arklow and thence to the scene of the evictions, where a regular encampment is formed. The tenants have determined that they will not go without resistance, and wherever circumstances would allow they have been barricading and fortifying their little homesteads. The preparations on both sides bear more the appearance of actual warfare than the mere execution of legal decrees. Willing hands have been engaged a for couple of days in felling trees, the trunks beingplaced behind windows and doors and nailed fast together with iron spikes in a way which transforms the cottages into fortresses. In the two-storey house of Patrick Kavanagh he has made arrangements to cut away the staircase and resist until his family are driven out through the bedroom windows. The same spirit appears to animate all the tenants. It is likely that this eviction campaign at Coolgraney will be as memorable as those at Glenbeigh and Bodyke. Mr. Brook, a wine merchant of this city, is the landlord, and Capt. Hamilton, Secretary of the Landlords' Defence Association, is the agent of the property, which covers a wide area. It lies on Sloape's hill, not far from the beautiful vale of Glenmalure. The soil is poor and the people poorer. The rents, it is said, are from thirty to forty per cent. higher than Griffith's valuation. This it is, complain the tenants, that induced them to adopt the Plan of Campaign, which was put in operation on the estate months ago by Mr. John Dillon, M. P., when a claim for a reduction of thirty per cent was made.

PRIEST AGAINST BISHOP.

Father Hynes Charges His Ecclesiastical Superior with Perjury.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 5.—The controversy between Bishop Hogan and several priests of this diocese is growing more bitter. Very serious charges against the Bishop are made by Father Hynes. He states in substance that the priests are so cowed by the Bishop's methods that they dare not voice their sentiments. He cites numerous alleged instances where the Bishop, controlled by blind rage, offered priests gross indignities, even he charges going so far as to kick them down stairs. He declares that he can prove by document ary evidence thwt the Bishop perjured himself lately on the witness stand. The probabilities are that the whole matter will be taken to Rome for settlement soon.

BARLEY.

Canada produces better barley than is grown in the United States. A few years ago the difference was so marked that the best Canadian barley in New York was worth 20 cents a bushel more than the best native barley. But of late years the great difference is disappearing. In the Northwestern states they are raising a barley not much inferior to the best from Canada. It is not impossible that they will in a short time wholly succeed in removing their inferiority. And if they do—if the Minnesota and Dakota barley should prove as good as Bay of Quinte barley—Canada's superiority will be gone, and commercial union will prove of no advantage even in this particular. It must be known that the farmers in the United States can grow barley in any quantity, the only trouble has been that so far they have not been able to produce the quality. But they raise just as good barley has can be produced in Wentwort county.

Exports of barley from Canada to the United States for the past ten years have been as follows:—

Year.	Bushels.	Value.	Per Bush
1877	6,249,035	$ 4,503,117	72 cents
1878	6,468,444	3,957,718	58 "
1879	5,198,224	4,643,048	90 "
1880	6,732,403	4,184,007	62 "
1881	8,724,931	6,212,998	71 "
1882	11,577,251	10,105,556	87 "
1883	8,741,626	6,245,303	71 "
1884	7,700,581	5,054,244	67 "
1885	9,028,314	5,477,441	61 "
1886	8,528,287	5,708,130	67 "

There is a manifest tendency towards lower prices and lessened sale; and that is due wholly to the fact that the Northwestern states are now sending to the east a better quantity of grain than was ever before raised in the United States. There is no certainly that Canadian barley will retain its pre-eminence in the markets of the United States.—Hamilton Spectator.

PORT HOPE.

THE WHEEL.—A detatchment of the Cobourg Bicycle Club rode up on Tuesday evening. A race is being arranged between the Cobourg and Port Hope clubs that will prove interesting. The clubs are to ride to a point half way between the two towns, and then five members of each club will race for the town chosen. The club wins that brings the most of its five racers in ahead. The Port Hope club are willing, and hope the Cobourg men may see their way clear to accepting the friendly competition.—Times.

One Man Captures Fifteen Dacoits.

Jemadhar Syedashim, of the Twenty-Seventh Madras Infantry, is not the man to be frightened by a Dacoit or two. Being out alone one day, he came across a party of fifteen. Most men would have given the Dacoits a chance of getting away, but not so Jemadhar Syedashim. He called on them to surrender, and they did. Moreover, they laid down their arms; and the Jemadhar, making one man bear the whole burden of the captured weapons, marched with his prisoners back to camp. No doubt this plucky act would have ended differently but for the demoralization to which the Dacoits of the neighborhood are reduced. Still, they were fifteen to one, they were armed and they still kept the field; and for this single Indian soldier to take them all prisoners was one of the most remarkable achievements in warfare. He ought to have the Victoria Cross.—St. James Gazette.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

THE CRIMES BILL.

LONDON, July 6.—Two nights will be allowed for debate on the third reading of the Crimes bill. If the Opposition endeavour to prolong the discussion the Government will move that the closure be applied.

ANOTHER REPORT.

BERLIN, July 6.—The Carlsbad Sprudel announces that Mr. Parnell is staying there and that he is suffering from diabetes.

RECOMMENDED.

LONDON, July 6.—The Standard says that Mr. Gladstone is prepared to recommend Sir G. Trevelyan to the suffrages of the electors of the Bridgeton division of Glasgow.

NEARLY REACHED.

BERLIN, July 6.—The National Zeitung says the increasing number and importance of the treason trials traced to the instigations of the French Government must be regarded as a very serious sign, and already indicate that the limits of endurance between the two countries has very nearly been reached.

HE WILL NOT LEAVE.

LONDON, July 6.—The Standard is authorized to contradict the statement that Count Von Munster, German Ambassador to France, has withdrawn from Paris, and to assert that he has no intention of doing so.

A COMMERCIAL CONCESSION.

LONDON, July 6.—England has obtained for her imports into Cuba and Porto Rico the same treatment accorded Americans in ports by the Spanish American Convention. The arrangement only operates until the end of the year.

THE GERMAN EMPEROR.

BERLIN, July 6.—The Emperor William arrived at Ems yesterday. He was everywhere greeted with the most enthusiastic cheers.

TO LEAVE CONSTANTINOPLE.

LONDON, July 5.—In the House of Lords, this afternoon, Lord Salisbury announced that the Anglo-Turkish convention in reference to Egypt had not been ratified by Turkey, and that Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, the special commissioner, has been instructed to leave Constantinople.

A SEAT FOR TREVELYAN.

LONDON, July 6.—It is announced that Mr. Edward T. Russell, Gladstonian member of parliament for the Bridgetown District of Glasgow, will resign his seat in favor of Sir George Otto Trevelyan, who will at once issue an election manifesto and enter vigorously into the contest for a return to the House of Commons. Since their great victory at Spalding the Gladstonians are confident of winning more seats upon the plea, which has now become their war-cry, that the Tories have entirely neglected England in their effort to crush Ireland.

OBSTRUCTION FROM AMERICA.

LONDON, July 6.—In a published letter John Bright asserts that English legislators have not neglected Ireland's interests. Good measures have been passed since 1880 looking to the betterment of the condition of her people, but these efforts have been obstructed through conspiracies fostered by the American enemies of England.

A GREAT FIND.

BERLIN, July 6.—Two unpublished letters from Luther to Breaz and five from Melanethon to the Swabian reformer, Lachmann, have been found in an old desk in a school at Heilbroun.

A CLOSER ALLIANCE.

VIENNA, July 6.—The Tagblatt says Germany, Austria and Italy are negotiating for a still closer alliance.

HOUSES ENGULPHED.

LONDON, July 6.—A portion of the land bordering on the lake at Zug, Switzerland, subsided to-day, and 27 persons were engulphed in the lake. Twenty persons are missing. Half the new quays at Zug fell into the lake. Forty houses, a crowded inn and the Hotel Zurich, a four-storey structure full of visitors, vanished entirely. The occupants of the buildings were engulphed while they slept and at least one hundred perished, including M. Collin, President of the Canton. Men are now at work trying to recover the bodies of the victims. An infant was found alive in a floating cradle.

MORE JUBILEES.

LONDON, July 6.—England is to have next year a jubilee for the coronation and another for the silver wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

TRIAL OF TRAITORS.

LEIPSIC, July 6.—In the trial of the German officials, who are accused of furnishing the French Government with information regarding the military situation of Germany, the prosecution has closed its case. The evidence is strong against Klein and Grebert. According to the sworn statements of the War Office authorities, the prisoners divulged to the French Government information of a character which greatly endangered the military position of Germany.

BISHOP OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Election of a Successor to the Late Bishop Binney.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 6.—The Episcopal Synod of Nova Scotia at a meeting this evening for the election of a successor to the late Bishop Hibbert Binney came to a decision on the first ballot, the only candidates nominated being Bishop Sullivan, of Algoma, and the Rev. E. G. Edgehill, Chaplain-General of the British Army, in London. The vote stood as follows:—Rev. Mr. Edgehill, clerical delegates seventy, lay delegates fifty-six, total one hundred and twenty-six. Bishop Sullivan, clerical delegates twenty, lay delegates forty-eight, total sixty-eight. The election was then made unanimous by a standing vote. Mr. Edgehill was garrison chaplain in Halifax eleven years ago, and was then considered of strong High Church tendencies.

KINGSTON.

THE CHEESE BOARD.—The regular meeting of the Frontenac Cheese Board was held in the Windsor Hotel on Thursday afternoon. Two hundred and thirty boxes of cheese were placed for sale, and R. J. Madden's offer of nine cents per pound for the lot was accepted. The board then adjourned.

The Daily Review

THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1887.

FOR COUNTRY, NOT SECTIONS.

We have no intention of following the Mail through its attack, nearly a column long, upon us in reference to some remarks we made condemning the attempts at the disintegration of the Dominion. Our contemporary simply misrepresents us and then proceeds to knock down the man of straw it has itself constructed. We did not ascribe these local agitations to political partizanship, but our main contention was that interested individuals were acting ungratefully and ungenerously in accepting the benefits conferred upon them by the policy adopted by the people of Canada, and at the same time refusing to submit to the restrictions imposed by that policy for the benefit of other parts of the Dominion. This view of the matter the Mail carefully avoids. As to the charge that we are dishonestly partizan we may remark that when the Mail was professedly a party journal it was not unfrequently so unscrupulous in its partizanship that we could not agree with it, and we fail to see that it has become more scrupulous now that it is ruled by personal instead of partizan motives. We decline to acknowledge it as an impartial judge of such matters.

Such assertions as that made by the Mail that the National Policy is to blame because there were unusually large failures in the Maritime Provinces, the increase being due to the dishonesty of some bank directors in involving the funds entrusted to them in reckless and disastrous lumbering speculations, are not worth refuting.

But the Mail uses one argument as to which we will say a few words because it is so mischievously erroneous and so widely used. It speaks of a Province being "driven by her economic necessities to demand permission to trade with her nearest market instead of being forced, as now, to buy and sell in a market over a thousand miles away." This is a mere reproduction of the argument used at Halifax that Boston is its natural market in which to obtain flour, as if the wheat were grown and ground in New England instead of coming as long a distance as the Canadian flour, much of it even from Minneapolis. The opponents of the National Policy constantly make the mistake or perpetrate the misrepresentation of telling different Provinces that their natural markets are in the nearest towns of the United States, as if they were the places of production or consumption, instead of being only distributing or collecting centres, with as long a haul as in the case of the nearest Canadian towns. As a general rule, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, the products of our Provinces and of the adjoining States are much the same, and the required interchange is between east and west, not between north and south. The exceptions to this rule are insignificant as compared with the whole bulk. Undoubtedly there are times when with reciprocity it would be advantageous, at some places and for some articles, that the people of each country should deal across the line, but the question is whether these exceptions would warrant the reversal of the policy of the people of Canada to develop the resources of the Dominion and promote interprovincial trade. The Maritime Provinces and the Northwest Provinces have especially benefitted by the policy which has given them the Intercolonial and Canadian Pacific Railways—which is opening the coal and iron mines by the sea and settling the prairies—so they should not be so greedily impatient of any restrictions to the apparently greater advantage of Ontario.

In order to do honour to the notoriety-hunting Butterworth, the Port Hope Guide suggested that with his name should be associated those of Jefferson and Webster. In justice to Jefferson Davis we would point out that if he was on the wrong side, he undoubtedly represented the views of his part of the country, while Butterworth is utter repudiated in his own land. As to Webster, did did not the Guide make a slip, intending to couple the dictionary maker's name with that of Wiman, who is chiefly known by his many words (dead headed by the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company) coupled with a genius for stock gambling and market rigging.

MISCELLANEOUS.

George Kerr, sr., while at work picking stones in field at Alexander, Man., on Monday afternoon, was instantly killed by lightning.

Headache, Billiousness, Dyspepsia and Indigestion relieved and at once by Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. Try it. Samples free.

Mr. Norquay left Winnipeg for St. Paul on Tuesday, in connection, it is believed, with raising money to build the Red River Valley Railway.

The returns of the English railway earnings for the week ending Saturday, July 2, show a decrease of £10,000, as compared with the corresponding week in 1886.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

Mr. Isbister, one of the contractors for the Sault St. Marie short line, states that the work is progressing very satisfactorily, and that the road will probably be completed and in operation by the middle of November.

It is stated that in view of the agitation in favour of Commercial Union, the Dominion Government has had a staff of clerks at work for some time preparing statistics of trade between the two countries.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

Mutilation of Trade Dollars.

There will be considerable delay in the redemption and payment of these dollars, and those who thought that all they would have to do was to go and get their money will be sadly disappointed, and it may be a long time before they are waited upon. The capacity for counting the dollars is only $100,000 per day. They have to be received, counted, and, if found correct, then certified to and paid. Hence the delay. But a new and big cause for alarm among holders of the trade dollar has arisen. It is that nearly all the trade dollars coming back from China are mutilated or "clipped," and these are only bought as bullion and not redeemed for $1. The Chinese had a habit, and it has proved a bad one, of "clipping," or marking with some of their outlandish characters each dollar that came into their possession.

These marks told of the character of silver and weight in each coin. Thousands of the dollars have as many as six or eight different Chinese stamps, or "clips," on them. All thus mutilated are no good, except as bullion. Now, as the trade dollar was coined for the Chinese, it is probable that a large majority of the coin is thus mutilated, and that is what makes the count at the assay offices so slow. Another scheme of mutilation was the disfiguring of the Goddess of Liberty on the face of the dollar. On some of the coins sent to the treasury here, the poor goddess has been almost denuded of her flowing robes, and placed in awkward positions.

A large number of samples have been sent to Secretary Fairchild and Treasurer Jordan, and the artistic sketches are remarkable. Treasurer Jordan has a large number of coins mutilated by the Chinese. All coins in the least mutilated, scratched, or punctured are refused, and only accepted as bullion. This decision has alarmed some of the speculators north, who went in heavy and purchased millions of dollars' worth of the trade dollars all the way from 85 to 97 cents, and they are anxious now to close out their lots at 90¼, preferring to lose the half cent now than lose more when the coin is examined and found mutilated, for advices received here are that many of the millions to be redeemed are in such a condition that they will only be purchased as bullion.—Baltimore American.

Hundreds of Buffalo Skeletons.

Between the Little Dry and Big Dry we saw what has become of the millions of buffaloes. Hundreds of carcasses lay scattered over the prairie in every direction. They lay thickly along both sides of the road, and the bad lands were full of them. After passing the Red buttes, on the way up, we were hardly ever out of sight of a bleaching skeleton, and sometimes a score were in sight at one time. Once I counted seventeen lying grouped together in a space of not over two acres in extent. It was a mournful sight. Although these buffaloes were killed only four years ago or less, the powerful effect of the dry winds and intense heat of summer have literally stripped the flesh from the bones and left the whole skeletons lying just as they fell, bleached as white as snow on the upper side and very often with nearly every bone in its place. The skinners had left the heads of the bulls unskinned and the thick hide had dried down upon the skulls as hard as horn, holding the tangled masses of the shaggy frontlet firmly in place until it bleached brown in the sunshine and finally was worn away by wind and weather. A little later we picked up eight just such skeletons as the above, absolutely complete and with not three pounds of dried meat remaining on any one of them. The bleaching power of Montana weather is perfectly marvelous.

As we traveled back to Miles City in December we gathered up fifty-one perfect skulls of old bull and cow buffaloes to store up for the museums of the world that will beg for them a little later when the buffaloes are all dead and the bone gatherers have gathered in and crushed the last bone to be found on the buffalo ranges. And I tell you it afforded me solid comfort to have it in my power to lay in such a goodly store before it was too late. For forty miles north of Miles City the buffalo bones have already been gathered up clean!—William T. Hornaday in New York Sun.

A Composite City Indeed.

New York claims 350,000 German residents and ranks the second German city of the world, Berlin being the first. What nationality is New York? One is tempted to digress and ask the question. Everybody knows it is the principal Irish city in the world. There are a good many people living in young Italy, and on Sunday night about 9 o'clock, if you stand on Twenty-fourth street, near Delmonico's, you will believe you are in Paris, because every passer by is talking French. If a picture of a representative Gothamite were called for it would have to be a "composite" picture, and one would have to awaken to the fact that although there is a true Bostonian there is no true New Yorker, or, rather, that there are eleven of them. Irishman, German, Frenchman, Pole and other foreigners, as well as half a dozen of American types, would have to sit for the picture of the true New Yorker, each individual influencing the others and being influenced by all of them, with a result as interesting as uncanny. It is possible to take a composite picture, and such a picture as the one imagined above ought to be taken to give a clear idea of the future cosmopolite.—Chicago Times.

A Nursemaid's New Attire.

Here is an accurate picture of—whom do you suppose? A Fifth avenue nursemaid. Where is her white cap? She doesn't wear any. And her apron? That is gone, too. How, then, is she to be distinguished from pretty girls who are not servile? By means of her wide white linen collars and cuffs. The fashionable matron concerns herself acutely about the costuming of the household servants. Just the same as in clothing herself, she seeks to keep different and ahead of the multitude.

White caps and aprons on children's nurses have become common. Therefore the swell mother sends her offspring out for an airing with a newly dressed servitor. This young person is clad plainly but neatly. Her bonnet is stylish, her bodice is fitted like a glove, her skirts are gracefully draped, and her feet are in French heeled gaiters; but conspicuous badges of her menial calling are a dead white collar and equally clean but glossless cuffs. These impart the desired singularity, and at the same time are new.—New York Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

PRAYING.

In temple of myself I pray my prayer,
And let it lie
Like planted seed to bear me precious fruit
Of due reply.

Not as I wish, perhaps, will be fulfilled
My urgent need,
And not in pathways, where I fain would tread,
Will God's hand lead.

Yet somewhere out of darkness I shall turn
Into the light.
And after groping through the dim obscure
Rejoice in sight;

And looking back upon the troubled course,
Thorny and long,
Where of my weary soul with struggling faint
Reheld but wrong.

At last in calmness of a great peace won
Shall clearly see
Where blood-stained footsteps mark the onward steps Toward sweet To Be;

And all the wounds, the pain, the blinding tears
As jewels shine,
While groanings in the night like echoes swell
Of strain divine!

For some day I may feel God's way is best
How'er I go;
And though His word be hard to understand
I yet shall know!

And so, although amid my strife I pray,
'Tis not because
I hope to 'scape the dealings of His Grace
Or change his laws;

But that 'tis when all mortal joys seem far,
And earth is drear,
My soul in yearning soars beyond the flesh,
And feels him near;

And having only human words to speak,
In limits bound,
I utter cries for help, while spirit depths
Find no true sound!

For Wisdom's Infinite and Present Love
Brood's o'er my fate;
So lying low upon His sheltering arm
I learn to wait!

S.B.S

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

Hans told his story, and was rambling on when the general cut him short.

"So cousin, so! You talk like an ox wagon—rumble and creak and jolt, a devil of a noise and turning of wheels, but very little progress. They will give up the twelve men for our four, will they? Well, that is about a fair proportion. No, it is not, though; four Boers are better than twelve Englishmen any day—ay, better than forty!" and he laughed again. "Well, the men shall be sent in as you arranged; they will help to eat up their last biscuits. Good day, cousin. Stop, though; one word before you go. I have heard about you at times, cousin. I have heard it said that you cannot be trusted. Now, I don't know if that is so. I don't believe it myself. Only, listen; if it should be so, and I should find you out, by God! I will have you cut into rimpis with afterox sjambocks, and then shoot you and send in your carcass as a present to the English," and as he said it he leaned forward and brought down his fist upon the deal table with a bang that produced a most unpleasant effect upon poor Hans' nerves, and a cold gleam of sudden ferocity flickered in the small eyes, very discomforting for a timid man to behold, however innocent he knew himself to be.

"I swear"—he began to babble.

"Swear not at all, cousin; you are an elder of the church. There is no need to, besides. I told you I did not believe it of you; only I have had one or two cases of this sort of thing lately. No, never mind who they were. You will not meet them about again. Good day, cousin, good day. Forget not to thank the Almighty God for our glorious victories. He will expect it from an elder of the church."

Poor Hans departed crestfallen, feeling that the days of him who tries, however skilfully and impartially, to sit upon two stools at once are not happy days, and sometimes threaten to be short ones. "And supposing that the Englishmen should win after all—as in his heart he hoped they might—how should he then prove that he had hoped it? The general watched him waddle through the door from under his pent brows, a half humorous, half menacing expression on his face.

"A windbag; a coward; a man without a heart for good or for evil. Bah! nephew, that is Hans Coetzee. I have known him for years. Well, let him go. He would sell us if he could, but I have fright ned him now, and, what is more, if I say no reason, he shall find I never bark unless I mean to bite. Well, enough of him. Let me see, have I thanked you yet for your share in Majuba? Ah! that was a glorious victory! How many were there of you when you started up the mountain?"

"Eighty men."

"And how many at the end?"

"One hundred and seventy—perhaps a few more."

"And how many of you were hit?"

"Three—one killed, two wounded, and a few scratched."

"Wonderful, wonderful! It was a brave deed, and because it was so brave it was successful. He must have been mad, that English general. Who shot him?"

"Breytenbach. Colley held up a white handkerchief in his hand, and Breytenbach fired, and down went the general all of a heap, and then they all ran helter skelter down the hill. Yes, it was a wonderful thing! They could have beat us back with their left hand. That is what comes of having a righteous cause, uncle."

The general smiled grimly. "That is what comes of having men who can shoot, and who understand the country, and are not afraid. Well, it is done, and well done. The stars in their courses have fought for us, Frank Muller, and so far we have conquered. But how is it to end? You are no fool: tell me, how will it end?"

Frank Muller rose and walked twice up and down the room before he answered. "Shall I tell you?" he asked, and then, without waiting for an answer, went on: "It will end in our getting the country back. That is what this armistice means. There are thousands of roolbaatjes there at the Nek; they cannot therefore be waiting for soldiers. They are waiting for an opportunity to yield, uncle. We shall get the country back, and you will be president of the republic."

The old man took a pull at his pipe. "You have a long head, Frank, and it has not run away with you. The English government is going to give in. The stars in their courses continue to fight for us. The English government is as mad as its officers. They will give in. But it means more than that, Frank; I will tell you what it means. It means"—and again he let his heavy hand fall upon the deal table—"the triumph of the Boer throughout South Africa. Bah! Burgers was not such a fool after all when he talked of his great Dutch republic. I have been twice to England now, and I know the Englishman. I could measure him for his veldtschoens (shoes). He knows nothing—nothing. He understands his shop, he is buried in his shop, and can think of nothing else. Sometimes he goes awhy and starts his shop in other places, and buries himself in it, and makes it a big shop, because he understands shops. But it is all a question of shops, and if the shops abroad interfere with the shops at home, or if it is thought that they do, which comes to the same thing, then the shops at home put an end to the shops abroad. Bah! they talk a great deal there in England, but, at the bottom of it, it is shop, shop, shop. They talk of honor, and patriotism too, but they both give way to the shop. And I tell you this, Frank Muller; it is the shop that has made the English, and it is the shop that will destroy them. Well, so be it. We shall have our slice; Africa for the Africanders. The Transvaal for the Transvaalers first, then the rest. Shepstone was a clever man; he would have made it all into an English shop, with the black men for shop boys. We have changed all that, but we ought to be grateful to Shepstone. The English have paid our debts, they have eaten up the Zulus, who would otherwise have destroyed us, and they have let us beat them, and now we are going to have our turn again, and, as you say, I shall be the first president."

"Yes, uncle," replied the younger man, calmly, "and I shall be the second."

The great man looked at him. "You are a bold man," he said; "but boldness makes the man and the country. I dare say you will. You have the head; and one clear head can turn many fools, as the rudder does the ship, and guide them when they are turned. I dare say that you will be president one day."

"Yes, I shall be president, and when I am I will drive the Englishmen out of South Africa. This I will do with the help of the Natal Zulus. Then I will destroy the natives, as T'Chaka destroyed, keeping only enough for slaves. That is my plan uncle; it is a good one."

"It is a big one; I am not certain that it is a good one. But, good or bad, who shall say? You may carry it out, nephew, if you live. A man with brains and wealth may carry out anything if he lives. But there is a God. I believe, Frank Muller, that there is a God, and I believe that God sets a limit to a man's doings. If he is going too far, God kills him. If you live, Frank Muller, you will do these things, but perhaps God will kill you. Who can say? You will do what God wills, not what you will."

The elder man was speaking seriously now. Muller felt that this was none of the whining cant people in authority among the Boers find it desirable to adopt. It was what he thought, and it chilled Muller in spite of his pretended skepticism, as the sincere belief of an intellectual man, however opposite to our own, is apt to chill us into doubt of ourselves and our opinions. For a moment his slumbering superstition awoke, and he felt half afraid. Between him and that bright future of blood and power lay a chill gulf. Suppose that gulf should be death, and the future nothing but a dream—or worse! His face fell as the idea occurred to him, and the general noticed it.

"Well," he went on, "he who lives will see. Meanwhile you have done good service to the state, and you shall have your reward, cousin. If I am president"—he laid emphasis on this, the meaning of which his listener did not miss—"if by the support of my followers I become president, I will not forget you. And now I must upsaddle and get back. I want to be at Laing's Nek in sixty hours, to wait for Gen. Wood's answer. You will see about the sending in of those prisoners;" and he knocked out his pipe and rose.

"By the way, meinheer," said Muller, suddenly adopting a tone of respect, "I have a favor to ask."

"What is it, nephew?"

"I want a pass for two friends of mine—English people—in Pretoria to go down to their relations in Wakkerstroom district. They sent a message to me by Hans Coetzee."

"I don't like giving passes," answered the general with some irritation. "You know what it means, letting out messengers. I wonder you ask me."

"It is a small favor, meinheer, and I do not think that it will much matter. Pretoria will not be besieged much longer. I am under an obligation to the people."

"Well, well, as you like; but, if any harm comes of it, you will be held responsible. Write the pass; I will sign it."

Frank Muller sat down and wrote and dated the paper. Its contents were simple: "Pass the bearers unharmed."

"That is big enough to drive a wagon along," said the general, when it was handed to him to sign. "It might mean all Pretoria."

"I am not certain if there are two or three of them," answered Muller, carelessly.

"Well, well, you are responsible. Give me the pen;" and he scrawled his big, coarse signature at the foot.

"I propose, with your permission, to escort the cart down with two other men. As you are aware, I go down to take over the command of the Wakkerstroom district to-morrow."

"Very good. It is your affair. You are responsible. I shall ask no questions, provided your friends do no hurt to the cause;" and he left the room without another word.

When the great man had gone Frank Muller sat down again on the bench and looked at the pass, and communed with himself, for he was far too wise a man to commune with anybody else. "The Lord hath delivered mine enemy into mine hand," he said, with a smile, and stroked his golden beard. "Well, well, I will not waste his merciful opportunities as I did that day out buck shooting. And then for Bessie. I suppose I shall have to kill the old man, too. I am sorry for that, but it can't be helped: besides, if anything should happen to Jess, Bessie will take Mooifontein, and that is worth having. Not that I want more land; I have enough. Yes, I will marry her. It would serve her right if I didn't; but, after all, marriage is more respectable, and also one has more hold of a wife. Nobody will interfere for her. Then she will be of use to me by and by, for a beautiful woman is a power even among these fellow countrymen of mine, if only a man knows how to bait his lines with her. Yes, I shall marry her. Bah! that is the way to win a woman—by capture; and, what is more, they like it. It makes her worth winning, too. It will be a courtship of blood. Well, the kisses will be the sweeter, and in the end she will love me the more for what I have dared for her. So, Frank Muller, so! Ten years ago you said to yourself: 'There are three things worth having in the world—first, wealth; second, women, if they take your fancy, or, better still, one woman if you desire her above all others; third, power.' Now, you have got the wealth, for one way and another you are the richest man in the Transvaal. In a week's time you will have the woman you love, and who is sweeter to you than all the world besides. In five years' time you will have the power—absolute power. That old man is clever; he will be president. But I am cleverer. I shall soon take his seat, thus"—and he rose and seated himself in the general's chair—"and he will go down a step and take mine. Ay, and then I will reign. My tongue shall be honey and my hand iron. I will pass over the land like a storm. I will drive the English out with the help of the Kaffirs, and then I will kill the Kaffirs and take their land. Ah!"—and his eyes flashed and his nostrils dilated as he said it to himself—"then life will be worth living! What a thing is power! What a thing it is to be able to destroy! Take that Englishman, my rival: to-day he is well and strong; in three days he will be gone utterly, and I—I shall have sent him away. That is power. But when the time comes that I have only to stretch out my hand to send thousands after him!—that will be absolute power; and then with Bessie I shall be happy."

And so he dreamed on for an hour or more, till at last the fumes of his untutored imagination actually drowned his reason in spiritual intoxication. Picture after picture rose and unrolled itself before his mind's eye. He saw himself as president addressing the volksraad and compelling it to his will. He saw himself, the supreme general of a great host, defeating the forces of England with awful carnage and driving them before him; ay, he even selected the battle ground on the slopes of the Biggarsberg in Natal. Then he saw himself again sweeping the natives out of South Africa with the unrelenting besom of his might and ruling unquestioned over a submissive people. And, last of all, he saw something glittering at his feet—it was a crown!

This was the climax of his intoxication. Then there came an anticlimax. The rich imagination which had been leading him on as a gaudy butterfly does a child, suddenly changed color and dropped to earth; and then rose up in his mind the memory of the general's words: "God sets a limit to a man's doings. If he is going too far God kills him."

The butterfly had settled on a coffin!

CHAPTER XXI.

JESS GETS A PASS.

About 10:30 on the morning following her interview with Hans Coetzee, Jess was at "The Palatial" as usual, and John was just finishing packing the cart with such few goods as they possessed. There was not much chance of its being of any material use, for he did not in the slightest degree expect that they would get the pass; but, as he cheerfully said, it was as good an amusement as any other.

"I say, Jess," he sung out presently, "come here."

"What for?" answered Jess, who was seated on the doorstep mending something, and looking at her favorite view.

"Because I want to speak to you."

She got up and went, feeling rather angry with herself for going.

"Well," she said, tartly, "here I am. What is it?"

"I have finished packing the cart, that's all."

"And you mean to tell me that you have brought me round here to say that?"

"Yes, of course I have; exercise is good for the young." And then he laughed, and she laughed too.

It was all nothing—nothing at all—but somehow it was very delightful. Certainly mutual affection, even when unexpressed, has a way of making things go happily, and can find something to laugh at anywhere.

Just then, who should come up but Mrs. Neville, in a great state of excitement, and, as usual, fanning herself with her hat.

"What do you think, Capt. Niel? the prisoners have come in, and I heard one of the Boers in charge say that he had a pass signed by the Boer general for some English people, and that he was coming over to see about them presently. Who can it be?"

"It is us," said Jess, quickly. "We are going home. I saw Hans Coetzee yesterday, and begged him to try and get us a pass, and I suppose he has."

"My word! going to get out? Well, you are lucky! Let me sit down and write a letter to my great uncle at the Cape. You must post it when you can. He is 91 and rather soft, but I dare say he will like to hear from me," and she bundled off into the house to give her aged relative (who, by the way, labored under the impression that she was still a little girl of 4 years of age) as minute an account of the siege of Pretoria as time would allow.

"Well, John, you had better tell Mouti to put the horses in. We shall have to start presently," said Jess.

"Ay," he said, pulling his beard thoughtfully, "I suppose that we shall;" adding, by way of an afterthought: "Are you glad to go?"

"No!" she said with a sudden flash of passion and a stamp of the foot, and then turned and entered the house again.

"Mouti," said John to the Zulu, who was lounging around in a way characteristic of that intelligent but unindustrious race, "inspan the horses. We are going back to Mooifontein."

"Koos" (chief), said the Zulu unconcernedly, and started on the errand as though it were the most every day occurrence to drive off home out of a closely beleaguered town. That is another beauty of the Zulu race; you cannot astonish them. They, no doubt, consider that that, to them, extraordinary mixture of wisdom and insanity, the white man, is, as the agnostic Frenchman said in despair of the prophet Zerubbabel, "capable de tout."

To be continued.

LOSS AND GAIN.

If the June rose could guess
Before the sunbeam wooed her from the bud,
And reddened into life her faint young blood,
What blight should fall upon her loveliness,
What darkness of decay, what shroud of snow—
Would the rose ever blow?

If the wild lark could feel
When first between two worlds he caroled clear,
Voicing the ecstasy of either sphere,
What apathy of song should o'er him steal,
What broken accents and what faltering wing—
Would the lark ever sing?

Alas, and yet alas,
For glory of existence that shall pass!
For pride of beauty and for strength of song!
Yet were the untried life a deeper wrong,
Better a single throb of being win,
Than never to have been!

Give Them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

The Portuguese Ministry have proposed to Parliament that the buildings on the right bank of the Tagus be declared a free port, and that stores for the shipping, landing and bonding of all goods not destined for home consumption shall be exempt from all fiscal charges.

Horsfords Acid Phosphate.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Imitations and counterfeits have again appeared. Be sure that the word "Horsford's" is on the wrapper. None are genuine without it.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

THE REVIEW BINDERY.

Books, Magazines, and all kinds of printed work bound promptly and neatly.

The Daily Review.

THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1887.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Sold.

The Sons of England arch has been disposed of to the Orangemen. They will retrim it for the 12th of July celebration.

For hat cost mitts at bed-rock prices call at TURNBULL'S.

Excursion.

The annual picnic and excursion of the George Street Methodist Sunday School took place this morning to Hutton's Grove, Lindsay. There was a good attendance.

Paid.

Mr. R. N. Roddy paid the fine levied against him for an infraction of the Canada Temperance Act, and was accordingly released from custody.

LADIES' water-proof circulars, only 77cts at TURNBULL'S.

Ball.

The Belleville Base Ball Club expect to make a tour of Peterborough, Lindsay, Port Hope and Cobourg on the 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th respectively, to play with the clubs of those places.

Scott Act.

T. J. Bird and Mrs. Whelan, of Lakefield, and D. Costello, of Young's Point, pleaded guilty to a first offence before County Police Magistrate Edmison on Wednesday and were each fined $50 and costs.

Should be Removed.

A large poplar tree near Mr. E. C. Hill's residence, which was partly blown down by the heavy wind on Tuesday, should be removed at once, or it may cause an accident.

Medical.

In the list of the newly appointed medical faculty of Toronto University the name of Dr. G. H. Burnham, formerly of Peterborough, appears as Clinical Lecturer on Ophthalmology and Otology.

Fireman's Excursion.

The Peterborough Fire Brigade intend running an excursion in a few days. They have not yet decided on the day or to what point the excursion will be, but it is certain to be some place of interest, where a very pleasant time is to be spent. As excursions under the auspices of the Firemen have always been attended with great success, the one this year will in no way be eclipsed. Look out for particulars. 1d5

A CHOICE selection of heavy double and twisted Cottonades, just the thing for harvesting, now in stock at TURNBULL'S.

Personal.

Miss A. Delaney has returned to town after completing her second term in the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston. She speaks highly of the institution and is confident that it gives a first class musical training. Mr. Archie Macdonald, an old Peterborough boy, is also a pupil of the Conservatory.

Mr. J. C. T. Lacey leaves town this evening for Toronto where he will reside. His family will follow to-morrow.

PURE silk gloves, and seamless hosiery at astonishingly low prices at TURNBULL'S.

Oddfellows' Demonstration.

The Oddfellows of Peterborough have just issued a large three-sheet colored poster of the events which will take place at the magnificent demonstration to be held here on August 9th to 12th. From the programme laid out a very interesting time may be expected. The following gives a very brief idea of what may be seen: At the Central Park at 1 o'clock p. m. on August 10th a procession will be formed, accompanied by some of the finest bands in the Dominion. They will parade the principal streets to the Driving Park and Agricultural Grounds, where an exhibition drill of militant and fancy movements will be given. After the exhibition drill a silk flag will be presented with appropriate ceremonies to each of the cantons present. The parade, which will consist of some hundreds of uniformed chevaliers, will form a very imposing spectacle. A company of Highland pipers in uniform will accompany the Montreal Canton. After the drill and presentation ceremonies there will be a free for all trotting race. On the 11th there will be two excursions, one down the river to Rice Lake, the other up to Stoney Lake. Special reduced fares have been secured on all the railroads good for four days, from the 9th to the 12th inclusive. This will be a gala time for Peterborough, and all the citizens should turn out to witness the parade.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Sanitary Condition of the Town in a Satisfactory state.

A meeting of the Board of Health was held on Wednesday evening. There were present Councillors Menzies and McNaughton and Messrs. Dr. Fife, Edg. Pearse and R. W. Errett, Health Officer Clark and Sanitary Inspector Adams.

Dr. Fife was elected chairman.

Mr. T. MENZIES moved, seconded by Mr. Edg. PEARSE,—That the offer of Mr. A. May, to supply a nuisance ground for ten dollars per year, be accepted and that if possible, a lease of the premises be secured for a further term of years.—Carried.

Mr. ERRETT moved, seconded by Mr. PEARSE,—That the Secretary be instructed to notify Mr. Robert Hall, that he must abate the nuisance now existing on a lot owned by him, at the south end of Spaulding's Bay and also that the Town Council be notified to widen Townsend street to the full width of sixty-six feet.—Carried.

In reply to Mr. Errett, the Medical Health Officer stated that there was one case of diphtheria at the Protestant Home. The last month was the healthiest for many years.

The CHAIRMAN stated that June was the healthiest month he had ever met with in a practice of over twenty-two years.

Mr. PEARSE moved, seconded by Mr. McNAUGHTON, That the Sanitary Inspectors be instructed to inspect all private drains and to notify those using them that the drains must be kept in a sanitary condition or closed up, and also that the Inspectors notify all persons having waterclosets over the creek to discontinue using them, under pain of prosecution.—Carried.

Dr. CLARKE reported that up to date the following sanitary work had been done:—

Notices served	204
Yards examined	530
Yards found clean	316
Slaughter houses removed	2

The meeting then adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

POLICE COURT.

HORSE AT LARGE.

THURSDAY, July 7.—Mr. Isaac Hendricks, of Edinburgh street, was charged with allowing a horse to run at large. He pleaded guilty and was fined $2 and costs.

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

Two young boys named Saunders and Hefferin were charged with using indecent and abusive language towards Mrs. Wm. Carr, at the locks. The case was enlarged until Tuesday next.

SEE KIDD'S stock of boots and shoes Prices away, away down.

Peterborough Presbytery.

The Presbytery of Peterborough met in Port Hope on the 5th of July. There were seventeen ministers and three elders present. The clerk reported that Messrs. Cleland and Beattie had been allowed by the Assembly to retire from the active duties of the ministry and to have their names placed on the roll of aged and infirm ministers. A committee was appointed to frame a suitable minute in connection with the death of the late J. W. Smith, of Grafton. A conference on systematic beneficence was appointed for next meeting. A committee on evangelistic work was appointed. Delegates were appointed to visit the several mission fields before next meeting. Former standing committees were reappointed, with the exception of Mr. Carmichael, who takes the place of Mr. Mitchell as convener on the state of religion. Next meeting to be held in St. Andrew's Church, Peterborough, on the 13th September, at 10 o'clock a. m.

LADIES' and children's parasols of every description, cheaper than the cheapest at TURNBULL'S.

Refrigeration and Shipping of Meat.

Some shippers consider thirty-four degrees, Fahrenheit, the proper temperature for the refrigerator containing carcasses of beeves and sheep; this temperature does not freeze the meat solid, it only chills, and when meats preserved thus are exposed to the outside air, they do not sweat nearly so much as if the temperature of the refrigerator had been noticeably lower. Other acknowledged authorities on the subject contend that thirty degrees is the best temperature, but there is no doubt that this degree of cold causes on exposure to common air, a heavier deposit of moisture on the surface of the meats thus treated. Meats have been held for eight weeks in perfect condition, and with very slight discoloration of the surface. The degree of discoloration in meats varies considerably, according as the animal has been fed during life. Still-fed cattle deteriorate more quickly, and far more seriously, than do beeves which have been grass-fed, and the flesh of corn-fed beeves remain in the refrigerating process longer, without deterioration, than either of the former.

The most frequent cause of injury to meats held in the cooling room, is allowing the temperature to vary. If by oversight, accident or neglect, the temperature has been allowed to vary considerably, irreparable injury is the result. The chilling and thawing, incident to frequent and sudden changes of temperature, destroys fruits and injures meats to such a degree, that their relative value as food is seriously decreased, the appearance damaged, the delicacy of the flavor lost, and much difficulty experienced in cooking.

The meats from Australia, which compete on the British markets with American meats, are less liked than ours, solely because they are frozen hard, and ours are preferred because they are only properly chilled.—American Agriculturist for May.

MAKE YOUR CHOICE.

Make your mind up to this: That Commercial Unionism is Gritism. The appearance at Port Hope and the active part then and there taken by Mr. Preston settles that. It will be the old story of 1878 over again. We shall whip them just the same. Mark our words. The politician who adopts commercial union is lost. Make your choice, gentlemen. We have made ours.—Toronto World.

LIFE INSURANCE METHODS.

The following extracts are taken from the Monetary Times:—

"The easy going good nature with which people put their money into new and cheap-looking life assurance schemes, would make one think that money is easily earned when it is risked so readily. The Chicago Tribune condenses a large amount of sensible advice into ten "Don'ts," of which the following is to the point. 'Don't above all things allow yourself to be talked into investing in Assessment Life Assurance.' It is a snare and a delusion. In no proper acceptation of that term can it be considered genuine life insurance. It promises no future certainty. It is like a rope of sand that is likely to go to pieces by the disintegration of its parts. Its policies are not marketable. Its promises are conditional. While it may have merit as a charity, it has none as genuine life insurance, which will provide for your family after you are gone. Genuine life insurance gives you a definite contract for the payment of a fixed sum at a time certain. It is the most substantial provision for the security of those dependent upon us that has been yet devised by man. Assessment insurance per contra may involve you in financial ruin since each member is legally liable to all others, you cannot honorably escape assessment, you still remain financially responsible even though you cannot compel an assessment in behalf of your heirs after your demise."

"The Illinois Masons' Benevolent Society, an assessment association, similar to the London, (Ont.) Masonic Mutual, seems rapidly on the way to ruin. It had, at the beginning of 1885, 4,340 members holding certificates for $17,893,000, and ended 1886 with only 2,777 members holding $11,195,000, loss of membership in two years 1,563 holding $6,698,000. The death losses paid were 129 for $411,136. The unpaid death claims on January 1, 1887, were $43,975. In 1878 it had over 5,000 members and the cost per $1,000 to each was $8.70, but now is over $21, besides expenses. This decline is characteristic of so many societies in the States—witness the crowd of Pennsylvania and Ohio associations, and the long list we published the other day from Michigan—that it is a wonder the general public is not warned that there must be something faulty about the principle or the working, or both, of assessment insurance companies." 1d51w26

How to gain Health and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled.' Dr. Thos. Prim, Ala., says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child 9 months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

QUEBEC CITADEL FIRE.

Further Particulars—Narrow Escapes—Horses Burned—The Cause Unascertained.

QUEBEC, July 7.—No horses were saved at the Citadel fire. Twenty-three chargers perished. This morning the authorities were busily engaged in carting of the carcasses. The cavalrymen sought for horseshoes among the dead as memorials of the conflagration. Some of the soldiers wept as they recognized their old companions, the horses they had ridden to the North-West and elsewhere for three years and more. One attempt only was made to save a horse. This was the magnificent gray. A coat was hastily thrown over his head, but thinking his stall a safer place he when he had got near the door dashed back to his old quarters and died. The men say that no human being could stand in the intense heat. Many tried to enter the burning stables, but the flames and smoke drove them back.

ARRESTED.

Harrison, the soldier on guard at the stables, has been arrested. He will first appear before Col. Turnbull, his commanding officer, and will then be turned over for final examination to Col. Montizambert, the commandent of the Citadel. No one yet knows the precise cause of the fire. It broke out in the cavalry barracks and stables, very near to the powder magazine.

NARROW ESCAPES.

No one suffered serious injury, though one man was struck on the hip by a spent shell and hurt slightly, and a gunner belonging to Battery B was hurt on the side. One piece of shell, about four inches in diameter, came whistling down Citadel Hill and almost struck one of our citizens, who was standing in the roadway. This episode created some consternation, and the crowd again vanished to safer quarters.

PLENTY OF WATER.

Fortunately the Citadel is well supplied with water. In addition to the new water there are six or eight large tanks on the premises capable of holding about 30,000 to 35,000 gallons of water each. The supply was thus practically unlimited.

VALUABLE STORES.

The Battery losses all its stores, much of which came to it from the Imperial authorities and were very valuable. The Governor-General's and officers' quarters, the stables of the artillery, the hospital and the provincial armory, which contain twenty-five thousand stand of arms, were untouched.

Sunday School Excursion.

The annual excursion of the Sunday School of the George Street Methodist Church was held on Thursday. The train left the Grand Trunk Station at 8.30 o'clock in the morning and arrived at Hutton's Grove, near Lindsay, after a pleasant run. There was a fair attendance and the weather was all that could be desired. A variety of amusements were arranged, including races for the children, baseball, football, &c. In a race for married men, the Superintendent, Mr. J. W. Flavelle, proved to be the fastest on foot, and Mr. A. E. Scott was victor in the race for young men. A tug of war took place between married and single men, and the bachelors proved to be superior to the benedicts in strength. The Rev. F. H. Wallace and Mr. T. W. Robinson had charge of the children's races and put life into the amusements. The grab game was very exciting, and the shoe race caused great merriment. A number went out from Lindsay and a bus ran from that town to the Grove. The party arrived home about 7 o'clock. The excursion was one of the most enjoyable of these annual occurrences ever held under the auspices of the school.

Annual Sermon.

The Rev. I. Tovell will preach the annual sermon to the Orangemen and True Blues of Peterborough district in St. Paul's Church on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. A collection will be taken up in aid of the Peterborough Protestant Home.

Will the party who found a parcel containing Dry Goods addressed to Mrs. Fort, kindly return same to the Golden Lion and oblige, R. FAIR.

THE CRIMES BILL.

Gladstone Proposes the Three Months' Hoist—The Debate Adjourned.

LONDON, July 7.—In the House of Commons, on the motion for the third reading of the Crimes bill, Mr. Gladstone, amid prolonged cheers, made a contra motion that the bill be read a third time this day three months. Mr. Gladstone said the bill was the Conservative alternative to Home Rule, and therefore bore a different aspect from any ordinary coercion bill. The old Coercion measure had been aimed at crime only, but this new one passed beyond crime and aimed at societies. Further, this bill had been brought in without any foundation such as underlaid all former Coercion Bills, based on the existence of exceptional crime. Mr. Balfour had disregarded all precedents requiring that the introduction of coercion measures be prefaced by a statement of exceptional crime. Mr. Gladstone maintained that the increase of crime in 1886 over 1885, in view of the agricultural distress in Ireland, was exceedingly small. Comparing the official record of the Tory Government in power in Ireland in 1885 with those in power the first five months of 1887, there was a marked decrease in agrarian crime, yet in 1885 they refrained from introducing a coercion measure from motives of policy. A comparison of past and present statistics afforded no show of justification for the present measure. Another contrast was that past parliaments had been nearly unanimous in assenting to coercion, while this bill was opposed by a large minority in the House and by a majority of the people of the country, a majority that was not at all likely to diminish. He contended that the Government were bound to extend to the occupiers of land in Ireland a perfect equality with English trades unions as regards the rights and practices enjoyed by the latter, among which combinations and exclusive dealings were sanctioned. As the bill stood, if an Irishman joined an association it was for Mr. Balfour to say whether or not he became a criminal by the Act. In conclusion Mr. Gladstone said that Ireland, after seventy years of oppression and wrong, was in a state of misery and wretchedness. In the whole British Empire there was not, he said, a square yard of land which, England held by force alone except in Ireland where force was employed. Ireland was held by mastery, but the Government refused to learn that mastery involved responsibility. The Tories professed to be fighting for the Union of the Empire, a fight in which the Liberals joined. (Laughter and cheers.) The Liberals held that the charge of disunion was ridiculous. It was evident that the present state of affairs could not last long, as Mr. Gladstone believed that every day tended to bring the Tories nearer their doom. Mr. Gladstone then moved for the rejection of the bill amid cheers from the Liberal and Parnellite benches.

MR. BALFOUR'S REPLY.

Mr. Balfour, replying to Mr. Gladstone, first referred to the charge than the Government had brought down the bill as an alternative to Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule proposals. If that were the case he felt justified in saying that it was sufficient to recommend the measure to the acceptance of the House. The Government were mainly justified in introducing their proposals by the state of social tyranny which had recently been seen in Ireland, a tyranny that attacked the rights and liberties of the minority, and both of these were elementary principles without which a country could never be prosperous. He contended that crime was worse now in Ireland than in 1870, when Mr. Gladstone promoted coercion. He taunted Mr. Gladstone with having introduced in 1881 an arbitrary coercive measure which enabled the Irish Chief Secretary to imprison anybody at will. He ridiculed the comparison that had been made between trades unions and societies whose object was the dismemberment of the Empire and which were supported by foreigners. The trades unions might well be indignant at a comparison of their honest, peaceful efforts with those of boycotters and political conspirators. Mr. Gladstone had made an insidious and inaccurate statement regarding this years' crime in Ireland. Early in the year there was a visible improvement but at the last Quarter Sessions there were evidences of a relapse. In June sixty-two serious crimes were committed, ten above the average of the previous eighteen months.

MR. WILLIAM O'BRIEN praised Mr. Gladstone's brave opposition to the bill. Mr. Gladstone, he said, was the greatest conquerer of Ireland. While others conquered by the might of arms, Mr. Gladstone conquered by mere generosity of soul. After Major Saunderson and Attorney-General Webster had replied on behalf of the Government, the debate was adjourned.

Edison's Latest Invention.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 6.—Mr. Thos. A. Edison is here on business. He says that he has invented a method of electrical communication under water by vessels at sea. It consists of a sounding apparatus to which vibrations will be imparted by a steam whistle. The vibrations will be transmitted through the water about 7 miles, and can be heard by any vessel provided with a corresponding apparatus which happens within that district.

Massacre of Chinese.

PORTLAND, Oregon, July 7.—It is reported from Idaho, that a number of Chinese mining camps along Snake River have been raided by Indians or whites. Numerous mutilated bodies of Chinamen have come down the stream, four or five being found together a few days since. It is thought that white men who robbed the Chinese of their gold dust, committed the murder. It is said the Chinese Minister at Washington has been notified of the outrage.

A Sign of Prosperity.

CHICAGO, July 7.—The Executive Committee of the Vessel Owners' Association has decided to advance the wages of all seamen 75 cents per day. The new scale will go into effect to-day. A prospective season of prosperity is the reason given by the committee for the advance.

Bad for the Farmer.

ST. PAUL, July 7.—Some very gloomy reports are coming from Souther Minnesota about damage to crops of all kinds by drouth and clinch bugs.

A FIEND'S WORK.

A House Set on Fire by a Disappointed Hotel Keeper.

CLARENDON, Pa., July 6.—The conflagration here started in the Snow planing mill, and also in the Weaver Hotel, both fires breaking out at about the same time. Owing to the high wind the two fires soon got beyond the control of the firemen. Engines arrived from Warren in time to be of some service, but the only valuable building in town saved was the Philadelphia and Erie depot. The loss is estimated at $400,000; insurance small. About 1,200 people are homeless, and are either camping near by or sojourning at Warren. Provisions and material for rebuilding are coming in from the surrounding towns. That the fire was of incendiary origin is specially well established. It is alleged that Mahoney, proprietor of the Weaver Hotel, threatened to burn the town on account of being refused a liquor license. The fire started in a room in his hotel, and this morning a warrant was sworn out for his arrest on a charge of arson. He had disappeared while the fire was in progress, but searching parties found him hiding in the woods six miles from Clarendon. He is now in Warren gaol and precautions are being taken to prevent lynching.

PITTSBURG, Pa, July 6.—A Times special from Clarendon says: On Railroad street twenty-two buildings were burned; on Main street forty-four buildings and business places were burned; thirty single dwellings, ten business places, thirty tenement houses and half a dozen private residences were burned on Exchange street. Among the burned buildings are the post-office, the Weaver and Henry hotels, the waterworks building, the Clarendon and Brunswick hotels and a large number of oil rigs and tanks. Three hundred buildings at a low estimate were destroyed.

CAMPBELLFORD.

WORKING A MINE.—Mr. W. Forrester, who is in the employ of Messrs. Gilmour & Co., carrying supplies to the shantymen now on the drives in the back lakes, informed us on Tuesday that there are four-teen men at work in the mica mine lately discovered in Methuen township, [illegible] near Jack's Lake about six [illegible]. The mica is a first class article, and the mine is a rich one. Small veins of it Mr. Forrest says, are found in different parts of the township. When the timber is cleared off, which will take place in a few years, mines will undoubtedly be opened, he adds, and the back country will become rich for its mineral products.

TROUT.—Twelve years ago Mr. John Turner, of this village, put six trout into a little stream on his property in Belmont township, and on Friday last he and Mr. Robt. Linton had the pleasure of taking 130 fine fish from it. The same day they deposited 5,000 trout fry in two streams in the north part of the said township, and Mr. E. G. Burke let at liberty the same number in Savings' pond in Cramahe township. He and a few gentlemen of this village have a lease of this little rendezvous for the nimble trout. The fry was sent to both Mr. Turner and Mr. Burke from the Government hatchery at Newcastle by Mr. Wilmot.—Herald.

MESSRS. WIMAN AND BUTTERWORTH.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—The Peterborough REVIEW has always been noted for moderation while firm in its language in advocating or opposing the leading questions of the day, and has long obtained a prominent position among the respectable journals of the country. I regret, however, to observe, what appears to me, to be a departure from this desirable rule in its discussion, in yesterday's editorial, of the question of Commercial Union or full Reciprocity between the United States and Canada. It is, sir, fair to say that such prominent gentlemen as the Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, Mr. Erastus Wiman, General Waul and Mr. Jackson Wallace, are an impertinent little clique of lawyers and speculators and that opinions expressed by them and adopted by a few cliques and a small number of their dupes, is a correct statement?

Mr. Butterworth is a man of great influence in the United States, and is looked up to by the people, of whom no one in his own country would speak lightly. Mr. Wiman, an esteemed friend whom I have known for over 30 years, whose wonderful career has been watched with admiration by the people of both countries, is an honor to Canada, his native country, and an honor to the country of which he is at present a resident. Mr. Wiman is no ordinary man, a man that is doing a vast amount of good in his day and generation. It is laudable to see General Waul, of Galveston, here on such a peaceful and friendly visit. Mr. Jackson Wallace, of the Canadian Club of New York, is another illustration how Canadian youths can rise to positions of honor in that, the most prosperous nation on the earth, a country to which, where so many hundreds of thousands of Canadians have gone to better their condition and where so many have succeeded. I need say nothing of Professor Goldwin Smith, or the Honourable Wm. MacDougall, the members of the House of Commons, Ottawa, and Provincial Parliaments and other prominent gentlemen of the land who have taken part in the mass meetings lately held in Ontario, where the question has been so ably and so fully discussed, and so strongly supported by the people. I am pleased to be classed among the "dupes" of such leaders.

I shall not discuss the question of Commercial Union or unrestricted Reciprocity in this letter further than to say that men might as well try to stop the rising of the sun, as to endeavour to stop this great movement, the most important question that has ever engaged the minds of the people of Canada. Canada has had a taste of Reciprocity in the past and the people are hungry for a fuller meal.

Yours truly,
W. CLUXTON.

AFGHAN COMMISSION.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 7.—The President of the Afghan commission, yesterday, visited Sir Wesley Ridgeway, one of the English members of the Commission. The Commission will resume the consideration of the boundary question on Saturday, and it is believed in official circles that a definite arrangement will be reached.

REBELLION IN CHINA.

LONDON, July 7.—Advices from China state that a rebellion took place recently at Chang Chow, near Shanghai. The uprising was suppressed by the authorities, and 90 of the conspirators were executed. A number of secret societies have also rebelled in the Province of Kiangsi. A military officer and 11 soldiers who were implicated in the rebellion were captured and beheaded.

THE ANGLO-TURKISH TREATY.

LONDON, July 7.—Although the Anglo-Turkish Treaty, negotiated by Sir Henry Woiff, is now dead, there are indications that the Turkish Government is slowly bending under the quiet pressure that is being exerted on it by England, Austria and Italy, and that the Sultan will shortly append his signature to an instrument bearing strong resemblance to the discarded agreement. The influence of the Franco-Russian coalition upon the Port is waning, and unless something unforseen occurs to revive it, its demise within a brief period of time is assured.

THE RAILWAY RATES BILL.

LONDON, July 7.—The Government has been desirous of disposing of the Railway Rates Bill, a measure designed to prevent undue discrimination in the carriage of freight and passengers, and in many respects similar to the American Interstate Commerce Bill, during the recent session, but the great amount of time consumed by the Crimes Bill and the precedence of the Irish Land Bill over all other legislation after the Crimes Bill is out of the way, has compelled the postponement of the Railway Act until next session.

THE TREASON TRIALS.

Exciting Scenes in the Court at Leipsic—Spy, not Traitor.

LEIPSIC, July 7.—Brabards, one of the men who has been on trial here for treason during the last few days, was yesterday liberated by the court, the charge against him not being sustained. Counsel for Klein, for whom the procurator had asked a nine years' sentence at hard labor, urged extenuating circumstances, and declared that there was an absence of proof that Klein tried to seduce others from their allegiance. He had simply acted from motives of patriotism. The prisoners, Klein and Grebert, were asked whether they desired to make any statement. Klein excitedly protested against the punishment which was demanded for him. It was too great. He had committed no base crime. His chief offence consisted in being caught. "Punish me," he exclaimed, "as a French spy. I was born a Frenchman and am no German traitor." Grebert was greatly excited and almost sobbed while protesting his innocence.

Poisoned by Ice Cream.

NEW YORK, July 7.—A case of wholesale ice cream poisoning has been reported to the authorities. The number of victims, it is thought, will exceed fifty. Of these eighteen are known to be very ill, but the physicians think that they will all recover. A Sixth avenue confectionery sold the cream, and the proprietor offers $500 reward for a solution of the mystery as to how the cream was poisoned.

FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1887.

THE WIMAN-BUTTERWORTH AGITATION.

WHILE thanking Mr. Cluxton for the favourable opinion he expresses of the general course of the REVIEW we beg to suggest that if he reads our remarks as to Messrs. Wiman and Butterworth more carefully he will see that we confined the epithet of "impertinent" solely to the fact of their conducting their agitations in Canada, which has offered a large measure of reciprocity, before they do so in their own country which has refused reciprocity. If the United States had on the contrary offered reciprocity and Canada had refused it, we think these gentlemen would deserve credit for trying to convert us, and even if both countries stood on the same footing on this question we certainly would not call the agitators "impertinent" even if we thought they were commencing in the wrong place. The impertinence consists in lecturing Canadians, who are in favour, and have standing legislation in favour, of reciprocity, instead of lecturing their own countrymen, who say there shall be no reciprocity, or at least none without annexation.

As to our description of these gentlemen as lawyers and speculators, at the time we wrote there had been no prominent speaker on their side who was not a lawyer, for Mr. Goldwin Smith and Mr. Preston had not then spoken. Now, lawyers have undoubtedly as much right as any other citizens to express their views on public questions, but they are not special authorities on agriculture, commerce or manufacturing, and they are as advocates accustomed to make the best of any cause they espouse, so their advocacy cannot be fairly represented as a spontaneous expression of public opinion or of the views of those who are most directly interested.

If Mr. Butterworth is a man of great influence in the United States, the press of that country is strangely ignorant of the fact, for we gather from a large number of their journals, of all shades of opinion, that they regard him as a politician of very little influence, and [illegible] dared not bring [illegible] vote because he knew it would be ignominiously objected.

That Mr. Wiman is a gentleman of great ability, generous, public-spirited and enthusiastic, we cheerfully concede and give him due credit for these good qualities. But the abilities that lead to amassing large fortunes are often greatly over-valued, and they by no means necessarily imply largeness of views, impartiality, or freedom from a strong bias in favour of any course that would promote their individual success in their business or speculations. Without intending any personal disrespect to Mr. Wiman or his friends, we must hold to the opinion that he is one of the typical specimens of a class so injurious to the United States from its prevalence there—the monopolists of railways, telegraphs, special branches of trade, &c., and the millionaire manipulators of such rings. Before Canada accepts virtual annexation to the United States, it should consider well, among other points, the effect of a closer connection with such a system of rings and cliques.

So far there has been no indication of the popular movement in favour of Commercial Union or unrestricted Reciprocity of which Mr. Cluxton speaks. It has hitherto been and we believe it will so continue, merely a factitious agitation, instigated, conducted and exaggerated by skilful wire-pullers, the real farmers of Canada remaining as a body either indifferent or hostile, while no other class has favoured it.

While there was reciprocity between the two countries no doubt the Canadian farmer had good prices, but there was something else then existing besides reciprocity. If gigantic wars should again arise in the grain growing countries of Europe and in the United States, the Canadian farmer would again make money by feeding the fighters, even though the old prices could not be obtained in the face of the new competition by the very economical Hindoo in the production of wheat, the most important crop of the Canadian farmer.

A FREE TRADE VIEW.

We do not altogether agree with Mr. Wiman when he says that the abolition of the lumber duties by the United States would be a good thing for Canada. If these duties act as a barrier to our export of timber to the United States, they are acting as a means to compel Canada to husband her resources until a time in the not very distant future when she will be able to expend them with far more advantage. Our forests are disappearing now with a rapidity altogether too great. Even if these duties do not act as a deterrent to lumber export, still it will not be Canada but the United States that will gain by their abolition. Canada can get the full price for her lumber regardless of the duty. The American consumer pays the duty.—Montreal Witness (Reform).

A MAYOR GIVES OFFENCE.

Mayor Howland is suffering from the seathing attacks of the commercial union press. His crime was freely speaking his thoughts on the burning issue at the jubilee demonstration. This enormity joined to the indecency of leading the protest against the mission of O'Brien fills the bushel of his iniquity. A belief that he is mayor of a city peopled by voters who hold it no offence to speak well of their country may excuse him for venturing to publicly differ with the editorial Jeremiahs who see the Dominion already on the reefs of ruin.—Toronto Telegram (Indep.)

THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT.

EXPLANATORY NOTES BY REV. R. S. M'ARTHUR, D. D.

Lesson II of the International Series (Third Quarter), for Sunday, July 10. Text of the Lesson, Matt. ii, 12-23. Golden Text, Ps. xviii, 19.

Matthew alone records this part of our Lord's life. This he does in harmony with the plan of his Gospel. Christ's life and work are the heart of Old Testament prophecy. Its fulfillment in him in most unexpected ways, often through the malice of wicked men, is an argument for the inspiration of the Scriptures. We may see in today's lesson how God can watch over his church even in its times of greatest danger.

Vs. 13-15. The Angel, etc.—This expression in the Old Testament generally refers to the angel Jehovah, the second person in the Godhead. Strictly speaking, here it is an angel in the ordinary sense of that term, and reference seems to be to the angel Gabriel, who (Luke i, 26) appeared to Mary to announce the birth of the Lord. The word angel means simply a messenger. Soused, it is applied to prophets, to persons, and even to inanimate objects—to any person or thing which accomplishes God's will. But in this application it is limited to a race of beings of superior intelligence and holiness who did God's will by ministering to the heirs of salvation. This messenger appeared now to Joseph in a dream. The case is peculiarly urgent; there must be no delay. Egypt was at this time subject to the Romans, but it was not under the control of Herod. It had been for centuries familiar to the Hebrews. The way was easy. The Jews were numerous there, and had synagogues there. It is certainly remarkable that in the land where the people of God had suffered the Son of God should find protection. During the lifetime of Herod they might not return, but his death occurred probably soon after their flight. The prophecy here cited is from Hosea xi, 1. Its primary application is to Israel in Egypt, but in the child Jesus it has its complete fulfillment. Israel was called God's son, God's firstborn. There are many points of similarity between Christ and Israel in Egypt. In him all types and prophecies find their completion. Near the site of the Egyptian temple is the traditional place of Christ's temporary residence in Egypt.

Vs. 16-18. The massacre of the innocents.—[illegible] wise men did not return to Herod. It soon dawned upon him that he was mocked, i. e., treated with discourtesy. This was not the design of the wise men, but it undoubtedly was the conclusion to which Herod came. Two motives now influenced his conduct: first, he would gratify his wrath against the wise men; and second, he would be sure of destroying the child Jesus. All the children—all the boys. This is the true meaning of the word. Male children alone he desired to slay—not only those in Bethlehem, but also in the vicinity, the adjacent districts. Two years old and under.—It is difficult to decide on the exact length of time here indicated. It may mean all under two years, or all who were entering the second year. If Matthew adopted the usual Jewish method of reckoning, as it is likely he did, he would reckon a child who had just entered the second year as two years old. But the number of children slain could not have been great. Bethlehem was a small town. Its vicinity was not populous. Dr. Hackett, as quoted by Dr. G. W. Clark, supposes that the whole number was not more than twelve or fifteen. Enemies of the gospel have seized upon this incident as if it were an utterly improbable record. Many questions also have been started by it. It has been supposed by some that thousands of children were slain. This act of cruelty was quite in harmony with Herod's character, and it took place probably shortly before his death. We need not be surprised that Josephus passes it over it silence. The chief interest to us is in its connection with the childhood and preservation of Jesus. In the sorrow which resulted from this act of cruelty the evangelist finds the fulfillment of the prophecy in a secondary sense. Rama.—A city about six miles north of Jerusalem; not Ramah in the land of Ephraim, where Samuel was born and buried.

Vs. 19-23. The Holy Family Returns from Egypt.—Again Matthew is alone in the record here given. Herod is now dead. His death occurred at Jericho in the 70th year of his age and the thirty-seventh of his reign, as the result of a loathsome disease. Again the angel appears in a dream to Joseph, and urges him to return to the land of Israel. They are dead.—Not Herod alone, but those who aided him in the diabolical work; especially his son Antipater, who was heir apparent, and who would gladly seek the destruction of a rival heir. It is said that five days before Herod died he had this son, who had aided him in the death of his two elder brothers, put to death. The return from Egypt was thus brought about. The sojourn must have been short. Archelaus received half the kingdom on the death of Herod. His title was ethnarch. The other half of the kingdom was divided between Philip and Antipas, each receiving the title of tetrarch, or governor of the fourth part. After nine years the Roman Emperor Augustus banished Archelaus because of his cruelty. He slew 3,000 Jews at once in the temple at the beginning of his reign. No longer had Judea a native king. The scepter had departed. The sacred soil was immediately under the feet of mighty Rome, with a governor whose headquarters were in Cesarea.

He was afraid.—The presence of Archelaus alarmed Joseph. Again he was instructed by God in a dream, and he turned aside into Galilee, and dwelt in a city called Nazareth. Four times Joseph was honored by a revelation of God's will. Palestine was divided into three parts—Galilee on the north, Samaria in the center and Judea in the south. In Galilee Joseph would be safe under Herod Antipas, who was gentle and kind as compared with Archelaus. Nazareth means branch; there the branch was to grow up. It was a small city under the hills of lower Galilee, about seventy miles north of Jerusalem and midway between the Jordan and the Mediterranean. It was situated on the side of the hill.

Nazarene.—There is much difficulty in explaining this word. The word itself does not appear in the Old Testament. The best explanation probably is that Matthew does not intend to refer to any one prophecy. He has in mind the general language of the prophets in regard to Christ as the branch, and especially regarding his despised condition among men.

POINTS TO BE REMEMBERED.

1. God still watches over the church, and guards even his youngest and weakest disciples from the wiles of their foes.

2. Safety is found only in implicit obedience to the divine command.

3. The enemies of God are also enemies of one another, and will hasten their own destruction. God thus makes the wrath of men to praise him.

4. Believers must be identified with Christ in his lowly life at Nazareth, that they may be prepared to share his glory in the New Jerusalem.—Sunday School World.

Dying to Slow Music.

Why is it that death scenes are so artificially managed on the stage nowadays, particularly when is taken into consideration the realism that actors and actresses endeavor to throw into their performances? A noted actress is playing Meg Merrilies at the opera house. In the last act the witch is shot and dies to slow music. A group of personages stand near her in a picturesque tableau, but no one offers to staunch the wound, no one tenders a stimulant; they simply stand in striking poses and watch her die. In real life some one would have sent for a doctor, a comfortable resting place would have been made for the sufferer, and an effort would have been made to ease the last moments of the dying one.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep, by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for Diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

How to gain Health and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled. Dr. Thos. Prim, Ala., says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child eight months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

Golden Medical Discovery.

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proved its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating, nutritive properties. GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

EPPS'S COCOA BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

John stood and watched the inspanning absently. The fact was that he, too, was conscious of a sensation of regret. He felt ashamed of himself for it, but there it was; he was sorry to leave the place. For the last week or so he had been living in a dream, and everything outside that dream was blurred and indistinct as a landscape in a fog. He knew the things were there, but he did not quite appreciate their relative size and position. The only real thing was his dream; all else was as vague as those far off people and events that we lose in infancy and find again in old age.

And now there would be an end of dreaming: the fog would lift, and he must face the facts. Jess, with whom he had dreamed, would go away to Europe and he would marry Bessie, and all this Pretoria business would glide away into the past like a watch in the night. Well, it must be so; it was right and proper that it should be so, and he for one was not going to flinch from his duty; but he would have been more than human had he not felt the pang of awakening. It was all so very unfortunate.

By this time Mouti had got the horses up, and asked if he was to inspan.

"No! wait a bit," said John. "Very likely it is all rot," he added to himself.

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth when he caught sight of two armed Boers of a peculiarly unpleasant type and rough appearance riding across the veldt toward "The Palatial" gate, escorted by four carbineers. At the gate they stopped, and one of them dismounted and came up to where he was standing by the stable door.

"Capt. Niel?" he said interrogatively in English.

"That is my name."

"Then here is a letter for you," and he handed him a folded paper.

John opened it—it had no envelope—and read as follows:

"Sir—The bearer of this has with him a pass, which it is understood that you desire, giving you and Miss Jess Croft a safe conduct to Mooifontein, in the Wakkerstroom district of the republic. The only condition attached to the pass, which is signed by one of the honorable triumvirate, is that you must carry no dispatches out of Pretoria. Upon your giving your word of honor to the bearer that you will not do this he will hand you the pass."

This letter, which was fairly written and in good English, had no signature.

"Who wrote this?" asked John of the Boer.

"That is no affair of yours," was the curt reply. "Will you pass your word about the dispatches?"

"Yes."

"Good. Here is the pass," and he handed over that document to John. It was in the same handwriting as the letter, but signed by the Boer general.

John examined it and then called to Jess to come and translate it. She was on her way round the corner of the house as he did so, having heard the voice of the Boer.

"It means, 'Pass the bearers unharmed,'" she said, "and the signature is correct. I have seen the general's signature before."

"When must we start?" asked John.

"At once, or not at all."

"I must drive round by the headquarter camp to explain about my going. They will think that I have run away."

To this the Boer demurred, but finally, after going to the gate to consult his companion, consented, and the two rode back to the headquarter camp, saying that they would wait for the cart there, whereupon the horses were inspanned.

In five minutes everything was ready, and the cart was standing in the roadway in front of the little gate. After he had looked to all the straps and buckles and seen that everything was properly packed, John went to call Jess. He found her standing by the doorsteps, looking out at her favorite view. Her hand was placed sideways against her forehead, as though to shade her eyes from the sun. But where she was standing there was no sun, and John could not help guessing why she was shading her eyes. She was crying at leaving the place in that quiet, harrowing sort of way that some women have; that is to say, a few big tears were rolling down her face. John felt a lump rise in his own throat at the sight, and very naturally relieved his feelings in rough language.

"What the deuce are you after?" he asked. "Are you going to keep the horses standing all day?"

Jess did not resent this. The probability is that she guessed its reason. And besides, it is a melancholy fact that women rather like being sworn at than otherwise, provided that the swearer is the man they are attached to. But he must only swear on state occasions.

At this moment, too, Mrs. Neville came plunging out of the house, licking an envelope as she ran

"There," she said, "I hope I haven't kept you waiting. I haven't told the old gentleman half the news; in fact, I've only taken him down to the time when the communications were cut, and I dare say he has seen all that in the papers. But he won't understand anything about it, and if he does he will guess the rest; besides, for all I know, he may be dead and buried by now. I shall have to owe you for the stamp. I think it's threepence. I'll pay you when we meet again—that is, if we ever do meet again. I'm beginning to think that this siege will go on for all eternity. There, good by, my dear! God bless you! When you get out of it, mind you write to The Times, in London, you know. There, don't cry. I am sure I should not cry if I were going to get out of this place;" for at this point Jess took the opportunity of Mrs. Neville's fervent embrace to burst out into a sob or two.

In another minute they were in the cart, and Mouti was scrambling up behind.

"Don't cry, old girl," said John, laying his hand upon her shoulder. "What can't be cured must be endured."

"Yes, John," she answered, and dried her tears.

At the headquarter camp John went in and explained the circumstances of his departure. At first the officer who was temporarily in command—the commandant having been wounded at the same time that John was—rather demurred to his going, especially when he learned that he had passed his word not to carry dispatches. Presently, however, he thought better of it, and said he supposed that it was all right, as he could not see that their going could do the garrison any harm; "rather the reverse, in fact, because you can tell the people how we are getting on in this God forsaken hole. I only wish that somebody would give me a pass, that's all;" whereupon John shook hands with him and left, to find an eager crowd gathered outside.

The news of their going had got abroad, and everybody was running down to hear the truth of it. Such an event as a departure out of Pretoria had not happened for a couple of months and more, and the excitement was proportionate to its novelty.

"I say, Niel, is it true you are going?" hallooed out a burly farmer.

"How the deuce did you get a pass?" put in another man with a face like a weasel. He was what is known as a "Boer vernuker" (literally a "Boer cheater"), that is, a traveling trader whose business it is to beguile the simple minded Dutchman by selling him worthless goods at five times their cost. "I have loads of friends among the Boers. There is hardly a Boer in the Transvaal who does not know me"—("To his cost," put in a bystander, with a grunt)—"and yet I have tried all I know"—("And you know a good deal," said the same rude man)—"and I can't get a pass."

"You don't suppose those poor Boers are going to let you out when once they have got you in!" went on the tormentor. "Why, man, it's against human nature. You've got all their wool; now do you think they want you to have their skin too?"

Whereupon the weasel faced individual gave a howl of wrath, and pretended to make a rush at the author of these random gibes, waiting half way for somebody to stop him and prevent a breach of the peace.

"Oh, Miss Croft!" cried out a woman in the crowd, who, like Jess, had been trapped in Pretoria while on a flying visit, "if you can get a line down to my husband at Maritzburg, to tell him that I am well, except for the rheumatism, from sleeping on the wet ground; and tell him to kiss the twins for me."

"I say, Niel, tell those Boers that we will give them a d——d good hiding yet, when Colley relieves us," sung out a jolly young Englishman in the uniform of the Pretoria carbineers. He little knew that poor Colley—kind hearted English gentleman that he was—was sleeping peacefully under six feet of ground with a Boer bullet through his brain.

"Now, Capt. Niel, if you are ready, we must trek," said one of the Boers, in Dutch, suiting the action to the word by catching the near wheeler a sharp cut with his riding sjambock that made him jump nearly out of the traces.

Away started the horses with a plunge, scattering the crowd to the right and left, and amid a volley of farewells they were off upon their homeward journey.

For more than an hour nothing particular happened. John drove on at a fair pace, and [illegible]. At the end of this time, however, just as they were approaching the Red House, where Frank Muller had obtained the pass from the general on the previous day, one of the Boers rode up and told them, roughly enough, that they were to outspan at the house, where they would get some food. As it was past 1 o'clock they were by no means sorry to hear this, and accordingly John drew up the cart about fifty yards from the place and they proceeded to get the horses out, and, having watched them roll and drink, proceeded to the house.

The two Boers, who had also off-saddled, were already sitting on the veranda, and when Jess looked inquiringly toward them, one of them pointed with his pipe toward the little room. Taking the hint they entered, and found a Hottentot woman just setting some food upon the table.

"Here is dinner; let us eat it," said John; "goodness knows when we shall get any more!" and, accordingly, he sat down.

As he did so the two Boers came in, and one of them made some sneering remark that made the other look at them and laugh insultingly.

John flushed up, but took no notice. Indeed, he thought it safest not, for to tell the truth, he did not much like the appearance of these two worthies. One of them was a big, smooth, pasty faced man, with a peculiarly villainous expression of countenance and a prominent tooth that projected in ghastly isolation over his lower lip. The other was a small man, with a sardonic smile and a profusion of black beard and whiskers on his face, and long hair hanging on his shoulders. Indeed, when he smiled more vigorously than usual, his eyebrows came down and his whiskers advanced, and his mustache went up till there was scarcely any face left, and he looked more like a great bearded monkey than a man. This man was a Boer of the wildest type from the far borders of Zoutpansberg, and did not understand a word of English. Jess nicknamed him the Vilderbeeste, from his likeness to that ferocious looking and hairy animal. The other man, on the contrary, understood English perfectly, for he had passed many years of his life in Natal, having left that colony on account of some little indiscretion about thrashing Kaffirs that had brought him into collision with the penal laws. Him Jess named the Unicorn, on account of his one gleaming tusk.

The Unicorn was an unusually pious man, and on arriving at the table he, to John's astonishment, gently but firmly grasped the knife with which he was about to cut the meat.

"What's the matter?" said John.

The Boer shook his head sadly. "No wonder you English are an accursed race, and have been given over into our hands as the great king Agag was given into the hands of the Israelites, so that we have hewed you to pieces. You sit down to meat and give no thanks to the dear Lord," and he threw back his head and sung out a portentously long Dutch grace through his nose. Not content with that, he set to work to translate it into English, which took a good time; nor was the rendering a very finished one in the result.

The Vilderbeeste grinned sardonically and put in a pious "Amen," and then at last they were allowed to proceed with their dinner, which, on the whole, was not a pleasant one. But then they could not expect much pleasure under the circumstances, so they just ate their food and made the best of a bad job. After all, it might have been worse; they might have had no dinner to eat.

CHAPTER XXII.

ON THE ROAD.

They had just finished their meal, and were about to leave the table, when suddenly the door opened, and who should appear at it but Frank Muller himself. There was no mistake about him; there he stood, stroking his long, golden beard, as big, as handsome, and, to Jess' mind, as evil looking as ever. The cold eyes fell upon John with a glance of recognition, and then something like a smile began to play round the corners of the fine cut, cruel mouth. Suddenly, however, his gaze lit upon the two Boers, one of whom was picking his teeth with a steel fork and the other lighting his pipe within a few inches of Jess' head, and instantly his face grew stern and angry.

"What did I tell you two men!" he said; "that you were not to eat with the prisoners" (this word struck awkwardly on Jess' ear). "I told you that they were to be treated with all respect, and here I find you sprawling over the table and smoking in their faces. Be off with you!"

The smooth faced man with the tusk rose at once with a sigh, put down the steel fork with which he had been operating and departed, recognizing that Meinheer Muller was not a commanding officer to be trifled with; but his companion, the Vilderbeeste, demurred. "What," he said, tossing his head so as to throw the long black hair out of his eyes, "am I not fit to sit at meat with a couple of accursed English—a rooibaatje and a woman? If I had my way he should clean my boots and she should cut up my tobacco;" and he grinned at the notion till eyebrows, whiskers and mustache all nearly met round his nose, making him look for all the world like a hairy faced baboon.

Frank Muller made no answer in words. He simply took one step forward, pounced upon his insubordinate follower, and with a single swing of his athletic frame sent him flying headlong through the door, so that the free and independent burgher lit upon his head in the passage, smashing his pipe and considerably damaging his best feature—his nose. "There," said Muller, shutting the door after him, "that is the only way to deal with a fellow like that. And now let me bid you good day, Miss Jess," and he extended his hand, which Jess took, rather coldly it must be owned.

"It has given me great pleasure to be able to do you this little service," he added, politely. "I had considerable difficulty in getting the pass from the general—indeed, I was obliged to urge my personal services before he would give it to me. But, never mind that, I did get it, as you know, and it will be my care to escort you safely to Mooifontein."

Jess bowed, and Muller turned to John, who had risen from his chair and was standing some two paces from him, and addressed him:

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Death.

The death is announced of Mr. Thomas Short, formerly of Keene, and lately Bursar of the Lunatic Asylum at London, Ont.

Foresters Attention.

The members of Court Peterborough, No. 29, C. O. F. are particularly requested to attend in full this evening as urgent business has to be transacted. A. D. RUSSELL, Rec. Secy. 1d6

The Provincial Exhibition.

The Provincial Exhibition will be held this year, being the forty-second, at Ottawa from Sept. 19th to 24th. We have received prize lists from the Secretary, Mr. Wade.

LADIES' panniers with skirt fronts, also the latest improved shapes in bustles, just received at TURNBULL'S.

Saw Logs.

A drive of saw logs, belonging to the Rathbun Company, which has been lying in the Little Lake for the past few days, started on the way down the river last evening.

Erastus Wiman.

This prominent advocate of Commercial Union will not likely visit our town, but it is a very sure thing that Rowse's Satin Merveilleux at 65c is as good as other houses sell at $1. Go and see them.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

New Sidewalk.

A new sidewalk on the south side of Dublin street, and along the east side of Division street, which has been under construction for the last two days, was finished yesterday.

During July and August, you can buy goods at very low prices at Rowse's Trade Palace. Almost every article is being sold at sweeping reductions in price.

They Had to Walk.

A few canoeists took a paddle down the river last evening. On arriving at Crawford's Grove on their return they met the drive of saw logs, which had been let out of the lake. These were so thick that they had to leave their canoes in charge of a boy and walk home.

Simcoe Street Bridge.

The Street and Bridge Committee met on Thursday evening and opened the tenders for the construction of a bridge across the creek on Simcoe street. The contract for the iron work was let to Mr. W. H. Law, of the Central Iron and Bridge Works, the price being $2,500, and Mr. Harry Sherwood secured the contract for the stonework at $960, the total being $3,460. The bridge will be thirty-six feet across the stream and the full width of the street, sixty-six feet.

LADIES' and children's parasols of every description, cheaper than the cheapest at TURNBULL'S.

The Nicholls Hospital.

At a meeting of the Trustees of the Nicholls Hospital, held on Thursday evening, the purchase of a site for the new building was considered. It was decided to accept an offer from Mr. John Hall for a lot on Argyle street. It contains two and a half acres, and is opposite Mr. F. Hasson's—a very desirable site for the purpose. The purchase will be concluded at another meeting. The plans for the new building are being prepared, and when they are approved of work will be commenced.

At the Pacific Slope.

A couple of weeks ago Lord Aberdeen, lately Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and Lady Aberdeen, who are making a tour of the western world, were given a cordial reception at San Francisco. Lord Aberdeen replied to an address which was presented to him, and concluding his speech he said: "I am reminded by Lady Aberdeen to say that at the very moment of our arrival we were welcomed by some beautiful floral tributes, notably a handsome Irish harp, with the presentation of which Mr. Kavanaugh has been connected. He has also kindly supplemented that by a fresh supply of beautiful flowers every morning for the Countess, for which she and I must feel extremely grateful." The Mr. Kavanaugh referred to, who is an influential citizen of San Francisco, is a brother of Mr. T. Cavanagh, of the Stewart House, Peterborough.

Installation of Officers—Progress in the Past—Contemplated Improvements.

The installation of the newly elected and appointed officers of Peterborough Lodge of Oddfellows, No. 111, was conducted by Bro. E. E. Henderson, District Deputy Grand Master, on Thursday evening, July 7th. The following is the list of officers:—

Bro W A Stratton	I P G

" Thos Wilson	L S S
" W A Smith	Chap
" W Hartley	I G
" W H Ford	O G
" J Clarke, M D	Lodge Physician
" (Prof) Jacques	Organist

Representatives to Grand Lodge of Ontario—Bro. A. McFarlane, P. G. (re-elected), and Bro. S. Clegg, P. G. (re-elected.)

The ceremony, which commenced promptly, was witnessed by a large assemblage of members of the Lodge and visiting brethren.

Peterborough Lodge, No. 111, which was instituted on May 7th, 1873, has steadily progressed till it has become a flourishing and powerful institution for good in the community. Some idea of the influence of this organization may be gathered from a glance at the statistics which were submitted by the officers having in charge the fiscal affairs of the Lodge. They showed an active membership of 132 in good standing, an annual income from all sources of about $2,000, an annual expenditure of $600 for benefits to sick members and their widows and orphans, a cash balance in the Treasury of nearly $3,000 invested at interest. The question may be asked what mission have such societies to fulfil, and what good do they perform to recommend them to the favour of the public. The question is fairly answered by the figures submitted by this well conducted lodge, whose receipts and expenditures are based on actuarial tables, so that they are on a sound and permanent footing, and thus the savings of the members in the form of contributions [illegible] sure provision for their own possible wants while enabling them to assist afflicted brethren. The management is in capable and experienced hands; for their first Noble Grand they elected the late W. H. Scott, M. P. P. for West Peterborough, of whose qualifications nothing need be said, and they have since continued in the sound course thus happily commenced. The lodge has now outgrown its present habitation, and plans have been prepared with the consent of their landlord, Mr. Geo. A. Cox, for the enlargement and improvement of the hall which will be furnished and decorated in a manner to do credit to the body. This extension has become indispensable through the extraordinary growth of membership and the number of candidates continually seeking admission.

The Patriarchs Militant.

The committee in charge of the Patriarch Militant department of the Oddfellows demonstration have secured the Curling and Skating Rink on Charlotte street for the headquarters of the Cantons. They have made an inspection of the capacious building and formed their plans. The rink will be thoroughly cleaned and decorated in a handsome manner. It is proposed to have beds fitted up in the galleries. The north end will be curtained off, and in front of the curtain tables will be laid out. The front part of the building will be reserved for the formation of each Canton when they prepare to take their places in the line of march. The parlors in connection with the rink will be fitted up for reception rooms, and quarters for the officers, whence all official orders will be issued by the officers to their several Aides-de Camp. The rink is a very suitable place for the Cantonment and will be very convenient. Wash-rooms will be fitted up and supplied with everything necessary, and complete arrangements will be made for the comfort of the Military. Mr. Hazlitt will have the building lighted with electric light, and Mr. H. W. Kent has kindly placed a telephone at the disposal of the committee to be placed in the rink. On the arrival of each Canton they will be escorted to the headquarters, where they will be the guests of the Oddfellows and citizens of Peterborough during their stay here. It is hoped that the ladies and public generally will be interested and will co-operate and lend assistance to the Oddfellows in entertaining these guests. Anyone wishing to assist may leave word to that effect at the drug stores of Messrs. J. Nugent, J. D. Tully or John McKee, or at China Hall.

County Scott Act Cases.

Police Magistrate Edmison held a court at Keene on Thursday and tried three cases for violation of the Canada Temperance Act. David Howson was fined $50 and $6.75 costs, and W. Moffatt was fined $50 and $6.50 costs. The charge against P. McFarlane was dismissed, and another case was not heard, the defendant not being served. The charges were laid by Inspector Darling.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

The Twelfth.

The streets will present a pretty appearance on Tuesday next, when they will be crowded with Orangemen from this and surrounding counties. Some of the town and country lodges are making strenuous efforts to have the town nicely decorated in honor of the occasion. The central committee of the town lodges will retrim the three arches which are still standing on George street; the True Blues will build a large arch at the corner of Brock and George streets; the Nassau lodge will build a beautiful arch over Hunter street at the new post office. There is a competition between the lodges as to which will build the prettiest arch. As the number of people in town will be very large, and many will be here from long distances, the Orangemen would be pleased if business men and others would assist them to make the town look its best by decorating their stores or dwellings with flags and otherwise.

Again at Work.

The finishing shop and blacksmith shop of Whyte & Co.'s foundry, which was burned recently, are rebuilt and work was recommenced in them to-day. Until the other shops are completed the moulding and other work will be done at their Campbellford foundry.

Great Excitement.

Hundreds shot into that Cheap Cash Store on George street known as Rowse's Trade Palace, and bought $1 silks for 65c. Dress goods at half price and $3 parasols for $1.50. Their cheap goods astonish everybody.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

A HORSE STOLEN.

Brought to Peterborough and Sold—The Thief Arrested.

This morning Acting Chief Adams received the following telegram from the Chief Constable of Lindsay:—

"Stolen from Reaboro, on night of July 7th, a sorrel mare, 16¼ hands high, 8 years old. Arrest party and hold party if found.

"THOS. BELL;
"C. C."

The Acting Chief was not long in securing both the horse and the thief. He took the telegram up to the Stewart House to enquire of Mr. Cavanagh whether he had seen such a horse, and at the same time Mr. Cavanagh wished to see the Acting Chief to tell him that he had bought a horse but was suspicious about its ownership. The horse at Mr. Cavanagh's suited the description, and the man who had brought it there, who had given his name as Kearns and afterwards as Frank O'Donnell, was arrested.

Kearns came to the Stewart House on Tuesday night and paid a week's board in advance. He told Mr. Cavanagh that he was going out to Ennismore to buy a grey horse, and would bring it in and sell it to him. On Thursday night he told the clerk that he would be out late, and was informed how to get in. Next morning he was on hand, and about noon brought a sorrel mare to the stable. Mr. Cavanagh hitched it up with a colt he was breaking, and when he returned Kearns talked sale. A bargain was made for $100. Mr. Cavanagh was going to pay him, and had the money counted out, but changed his mind and told Kearns he would pay him this morning. Some men who were acquainted in Ennismore told Mr. Cavanagh that the man from whom Kearns said he had bought the animal had no such horse, and the suspicions increasing he made up his mind to speak to the police, with the result stated.

Kearns was taken to the police station and locked up in the cells. When asked about the matter he acknowledged having taken the horse out of a field. To a REVIEW reporter he said that he had been in Lindsay and had been drinking, and that when coming past the field the idea of taking the horse occurred to him and he acted on it. "Whisky did it," he declared, and that, probably, will be his defence.

The horse belonged to Mr. George Ray, lot 8, con. 10, of the township of Ops. Chief Bell, of Lindsay, came down on the noon train and will take Kearns back to that town this evening.

The Programme.

It is expected that eighteen or twenty districts will take part in the Orange demonstration on Tuesday, each containing several lodges. The local Orangemen and True Blues will assemble at 8 o'clock in the morning and march to the station. On the arrival of the different trains the visiting brethren will be escorted to the Central Park. The monster procession will be formed at the park at 11 o'clock and will proceed along the following route:—Down George street to Hunter, west on Hunter to Aylmer, south on Aylmer to Simcoe, east on Simcoe to George, south on George to Charlotte, east on Charlotte to Water, north on Water to Simcoe, west on Simcoe to George, north on George to Hunter, east on Hunter to Water, north on Water to Murray, west on Murray to the Central Park, where they will disband for dinner. At 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon they will reassemble at the Court House Park, where addresses will be delivered by local clergymen and Grand Officers of the Order.

THE NEW BULGARIAN PRINCE.

Astute Policy in the Bulgars—What Will Russia Say?

LONDON, July 8.—The election by the Sobranje at Tirnova, yesterday, of Prince Ferdinand, of Saxe-Cobourg-Gotha, to the throne of Bulgaria, was not wholly unexpected. Although Prince Ferdinand was not the candidate for whom the untrammelled votes of the deputies would have been cast, his election gave better promise of securing the approval of a majority of the powers for the Sobranje's action, and the German Prince who holds a General's commission in the army of Austria, was astutely selected by the wearied Bulgars. Moreover the Sobranje had been given to understand, through definite representations, that the support of those powers in ratifying its action would be forthcoming when necessary, and the rest of the voyage to the harbor of a settlement of the Bulgarian question outside of Bulgaria was plain sailing. Of course the Czar's emphatic veto will make its appearance among the properties of the comedy drama in due time, and then the fun will begin. Prince Ferdinand is not yet upon the throne of Bulgaria, and he may find the Russian bayonets blocking his path too numerous and determinedly handled to make it pleasant or profitable for him to proceed.

ITALY AND THE VATICAN.

Circular Letter from the Papal Secretary of State.

VIENNA, July 8.—A circular letter from Mgr. Rampollo, the Papal Secretary of State, to the Papal Nuncios abroad is published. It embraces the leading passages of the allocution of the Pope, delivered at the consistory on May 23. Mgr. Rampollo says: "That part of the allocution which referred to the attitude of the Vatican towards the people of Italy has been given an interpretation which cannot be allowed to gain credence. It is necessary for the proper understanding of the intention of the Pope that the passages should be known, in their integrity. There is nothing extraordinary in the wishes expressed by the Pope for the cessation of the conflict between the Vatican and the Government. No one can be unaware of the state existing. The church herself suffers from the present violent state of things. The same evils, indeed, are observable in society. The wishes expressed by the Pope spring from the very nature of his divine mission. Those who believe that the Pope's charitable works are intended to sanction accomplished facts against the church are in error. The Roman question must be settled in such a manner as will secure to the Pope complete independence and liberty of action. It is beyond the power of the Italian Government to change the conditions of the Pope. It is in this light that the Nuncios' explanations must be made to different governments at the same time that they are trying to obtain their support in conformity with the views of the Vatican." The circular points out that all the States are interested in the settlement of the question.

FARMERS AND RECIPROCITY.

A Real Farmer's Views—The Loss Annexation Would Bring.

Mr. W. C. Smith, Vice-President of Waterloo Farmers' Institute, expressed decided views in regard to the question of commercial reciprocity. He says few farmers are in favor of a commercial treaty; the majority here favor a reciprocal treaty such as we had twenty years ago. In reply to the question of direct taxation, he says our farmers are not ready for it. The feeling is that the land has enough to pay. It took 100 bushels of wheat last year to pay municipal and school taxes on a 200 acre farm. Three-fourths of our farmers are well off; about 20 per cent. are buying farms for their sons as soon as they come of age. Probably 25 per cent of our farmers have money out on interest, and thirty per cent just paying their way. The Crimean war and the United States war gave us inflated prices for our produce and raised the price of land from $40 to $80 and $90 per acre, which has caused all the grumbling to-day. Farmers who bought land at those inflated prices, and paid very little down, cannot pay their interest. American farmers have told Mr. Smith that they never saw so much good land well cultivated, good buildings, stock, etc., in one block in all the States of the Union as in Ontario. Mr. Smith probably expresses the all but unanimous opinion in regard to direct taxes, which would fall mainly upon the land. If we were a State of the Union the Dominion subsidy would be at once withdrawn, and taxation ensue. Then the 100 bushels of wheat per 200 acres, which it takes to pay the local taxes, would be largely increased in order to meet the Provincial demands, which now are satisfied through the customs.—Whitby Gazette.

THUNDER AND LIGHTNING.

Damage by Violent Storms in New Brunswick—Man Killed.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 7.—Immense damage has been caused in New Brunswick by thunder and lightning storms this week. Simmonds & Burpee's mills on the Tobique River, were destroyed, entailing a loss of $7,000, on which there is $3,000 insurance. At Birch Ridge, a settlement on the Tobique River, fourteen frame barns have been blown down, and at Grand Falls seven barns have been blown to the ground. During the storm at Grand Falls Robbin's circus tent was prostrated and a railway employe instantly killed by lightning. A stampede ensued among the horses and one man had his leg broken.

The Nova Scotia Bishopric.

HALIFAX, July 7.—The Church of England synod resumed its session to-day. A cablegram was received late in the day from the Rev. Dr. Edgehill, who is in Germany, stating that he was greatly perplexed at the offer of the Nova Scotia bishopric and asking for a week's time to give an answer. It was decided to grant the request and the Synod adjourned till August 10, but should Dr. Edgehill accept the bishopric the body will not be called together again.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

MR. PARNELL.

LONDON, July 8.—Mr. Parnell is said to be giving pecuniary assistance in the formation of new liberal associations in England and Scotland, and in maintenance and efficacy of similar organizations already existing, but the statements are not generally credited. The Irish leader's health is again in a precarious state, and his friends fear that he will be unable to take part in the discussion of the Irish Land Bill, which will come up in the House of Commons immediately after the passage of the Coercion Act, the final disposition of which will be made to-day.

GERMAN TREASON TRIALS.

BERLIN, July 8.—Disclosures brought out by the treason trials at Leipsic have added further poison to the political food on which the French and German masses feed and have greatly increased the diplomatic friction between the two countries. Especially is the former state of affairs true in Berlin and Paris, where scarcely anything else is talked about among the populace, and both the German and French Governments will soon find themselves compelled to interfere to prevent the outbreak of hostile public demonstrations if they are really sincere in their asseverations of desire for peace.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.

LONDON, July 8.—Emily Ann Smith, daughter of Right Hon. W. H. Smith, was married yesterday to Walter Acland, captain in the Royal Navy.

DYNAMITE EXPLOSION.

PARIS, July 8.—A dynamite explosion occurred in a shoemaker's shop in the Rue St. Martin yesterday, doing much damage to neighboring shop fronts. The shoemaker asserts that the explosion was caused by fireworks, but the police do not believe this. They say the shoemaker is an active communist, and they suppose he intended to creat an alarmist demonstration during the July fetes.

THE CASS CASE.

LONDON, July 8.—The Cass case is still the uppermost subject of agitation, and threatens to become the basis of a series of investigations into the methods employed by various home officials instituted by both Houses of Parliament. Mr. E. H. Pickergill, member for Bethnalgreen, has announced his intention to give formal notice of his introduction of a motion that inquiry be made into the administration of the Police Department, and in the House of Lords the Earl of Milltown has indicated his purpose of going still further by questioning the right of the police to arbitrarily arrest even a woman of loose character, who is not disturbing the peace.

THE CRIMES BILL.

LONDON, July 8.—Mr. Gladstone's speech in the House of Commons, last night, was a remarkably close and lucid presentation of the arguments against the Coercion Bill. The state in which it was delivered was animated, and at times the whole House was roused with enthusiasm. The Parnellites do not intend to prolong the debate on the Crimes Bill beyond to-day. The Government will have the usual majority.

THE CRIMES BILL.

LONDON, July 8.—The debate on the Irish Crimes Bill was continued by Lord Hartington, Mr. J. Dillon, Sir W. V. Harcovrt, Mr. Goschen and Mr. Redmond. When Mr. Goschen rose to speak the Parnellites left the House in a body. The third reading was passed by a vote of 349 to 262. The announcement of the vote was received with cheers and counter cheers.

A COMMERCIAL PANIC.

LONDON, July 8.—Twelve large Havana firms have gone into bankrupcy, including the Casa Hanez Sandoral. The failures have caused a panic.

THE CASS SCANDAL.

LONDON, July 8.—A police enquiry into the arrest of Miss Cass as an improper character, has been opened. Both Miss Cass and Mrs. Bowman her employer, whose testimony as to Miss Cass' good character, Mr. Newton, the magistrate refused to receive, are represented by counsel.

DESTROYED BY B HURRICANE.

LONDON, July 8.—The town of Nagy-Karolyi, in Hungary, was destroyed by a hurricane and waterspout on Wednesday. The site of the town and the adjoining district are converted into a vast lake. Many persons lost their lives. The people of the town believed the day of judgment had come.

AN OFFER TO REBELS.

BOMBAY, July 8.—The Ameer of Afghanistan has nailed to the Candahar gate, underneath the Koran, a proclamation offering a free pardon and the remission of two years taxes to all rebels who surrender.

THE PAPAL MISSION.

DUBLIN, July 8.—Mgr. Persico and Mgr. Gualdi, who have been sent by the Pope to inquire into the situation in Ireland, have arrived in Dublin.

COUNT DE PARIS' HOPES.

PARIS, July 8.—The Gaulois says that the Comte de Paris, in bidding farewell to his friends on the Island of Jersey, after advocating silence, said: "You may be sure we shall win before long. Monarchy will come without violent effort, and by a gentle transition, for our organization is in training and everything is ready. The new Government will get into immediate working order, and on the eventful day I, helped by all good Frenchmen, shall be King."

SIR HENRY JAMES.

LONDON, July 8.—What the Government now wants is to get hold of Sir Henry James, one of the first three lawyers in England, of great experience in public life, to whom Mr. Gladstone when meditating his Home Rule coup vainly offered the choice between the Lord Chancellorship and the Home Office. This last post Sir Henry James would really have liked. If the disputes between the Gladstonians and Unionists continue to increase in bitterness the tendency will be to drive all the latter into the arms of the Government, and the Tories may yet capture Sir Henry James, who, however, prefers to train in Lord Hartington's company.

THE AUSTRIANS INDIFFERENT.

VIENNA, July 8.—The attitude of the Government of Austria is of entire indifference concerning the election of Prince Ferdinand as Prince of Bulgaria. Count Kalnoky, while returning from Moravia, will meet the Prince at Bucharest. The press is a unit in congratulating the Bulgarians on the election of Prince Ferdinand

AWFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

LONDON, July 8.—The Wenchor river in China has overflowed its banks, submerging miles of territory. Thousands of persons are believed to have been drowned. The sufferings of the survivors are described as terrible. Chuchon city is submerged and the inhabitants have taken to boats.

CAMPAIGN IN SCOTLAND.

LONDON, July 8.—The tenants of Sir Alexander Jardine's estate in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, have resolved to adopt the plan of Campaign. They demand either a reduction of rents, a revaluation or releasement from their farms at Whitsuntide. There are rumours that tenants on other estates intend to take similar action.

MR. MORLEY'S SPEECH.

LONDON, July 8.—Mr. John Morley's speech at Manchester withdrawing his opposition to exclusion of Irish members from Westminster, and assenting to the Imperial Parliament to veto Irish parliamentary decisions has been a source of excited discussion in the lobby of the House. The Tories denounce it as an election dodge meant to influence half a dozen by-elections now in progress, but a number of Liberal-Unionist members perceive in it an open road to a compromise and are urging their leaders to reopen negotiations with Mr. Gladstone.

LOYAL SUBJECTS.

LONDON, July 8.—The Queen has addressed an autograph letter to Mr. Matthews, who presented to her an address by the loyal Catholics of London. In it the Queen says she has always felt full confidence in the loyalty of her Catholic subjects in and out of Ireland.

ELECTED FOR PADDINGTON.

LONDON, July 8.—The election for a member of Parliament for the north division of Paddington took place to-day. Mr. Aird, the Conservative, received 2,230 votes, against 1,812 votes for Mr. Rutledge (Gladstonian). This election was made necessary by the death of Mr. Cohen (Conservative) who, in the general election of 1885, carried the seat over Mr. John Kempster (Gladstonian) by a majority of 910 votes. The total vote to-day was 358 more than at the last election.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 8.—The Marquis of Hartington presided to-day over the meeting of Liberal-Unionists which assembled at Devonshire house, in response to his call, to adopt measures for concentrated action on the Irish Land bill. The meeting decided to support the second reading of the bill, and to reserve liberty of action respecting the measure in its committee stage. A committee, which includes Lord Hartington, Mr. Joseph Chamberlaine and ex-Attorney-General James, was appointed to consider and report advisable amendments to the bill.

RUSSIA OBJECTS.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 8.—The Novoe Vremya says the election of Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Cobourg-Gotha to the Bulgarian throne exhausts Russia's patience. "Austria will not succeed," adds the paper; "Russia's action may inconvenience Austria." It is semi-officially stated that the Government attaches no serious import to decisions of the Sobranje, and will not modify its attitude towards Bulgaria. The recent action of the Sobranje is regarded as not only insufficient to secure a Prince of Bulgaria, but, in the opinion of the Russian Government, is entirely illegal until such action has received the sanction of the powers.

DR. M'GLYNN'S CASE.

Ecclesiastical Legality of the Excommunication Questioned—Trial Demanded

NEW YORK, July 8.—An evening paper to-day says:—Dr. McGlynn's case has taken a new turn. From announcements in Henry George's paper and from intimations by Dr. McGlynn himself it appears that the Dr. is quietly awaiting the publication of the bulls of excommunication, and that when they are published he will not pass out of the church, as has been generally expected, but will make a fight against the ecclesiastical legality of the excommunication and will demand an ecclesiastical trial. Dr. McGlynn claims that, according to the decrees of the Baltimore plenary council two years ago, he cannot be suspended, much less excommunicated, without being tried by a council of the clergy. In this claim he is supported, not only by his followers, but, he claims, by many eminent divines.

The Rev. Dr. McGlynn returned to the city from the west this evening. He would neither affirm nor deny that he had received his notice of excommunication. He said his case was like that of the Irish prisoner who was told to plead, and replied: "How can I tell whether I am guilty or innocent until I have heard the evidence?" The doctor said he might have something to say later, but just now intended to take a vacation, speaking only on Sundays.

THE STANLEY EXPEDITION.

Provisions Running Short—Stanley Ill from the Excessive Heat.

LONDON, July 8.—The latest news from Stanley is that on the journey from Leopoldville to Leonkotela he encountered and had to overcome serious obstacles. One of the gravest difficulties he found was to replenish his commissary. The threatened scarcity of provisions greatly excited a number of his men and it became necessary to punish the malcontents with much severity to reduce them to subjection and save the expedition. Stanley himself is ill from the excessive heat. The expedition left Bolobo on the 11th of May and was expected to reach the Congo at its confluence with the Arembim by July. Stanley's programme was to encamp at this point, there to await the arrival of Tippoo Tib, who is approaching from Stanley Falls with provisions and a force of several hundred more men.

COBOURG.

A SAD BEREAVEMENT.—The Sentinel-Star says:—The town has been cast into the deepest gloom by the melancholy intelligence which arrived about two o'clock, that Wm. Hargraft, Esq., and his daughter Maggie, who were spending a few weeks at Scarboro Beach, near Portland, were drowned this morning. We have not been able to ascertain the particulars.

LADIES' water-proof circulars, only 77cts at TURNBULL'S.

The Daily Review

SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1887.

CANADIAN WOOL.

A SUBJECT which we have before now discussed is again coming to the front, namely the price obtained by the farmers of Canada for their wool. The great majority of the sheep in this country are long wooled, and the price obtained for their fleece is not so profitable as might be desired.

It has been abundantly proved that short wooled sheep are more profitable both for wool and mutton than the long wooled sheep, and that the climate suits them equally well. The short stapled wools are in demand in this country, and are imported, while the long stapled wools are produced in excess and are exported to markets where there is not a much better demand, yet our farmers continue to grow the wool that is not wanted here instead of the wool that is wanted. Some of them look to legislation to remove the difficulty. Now, parliament is almost omnipotent, but there is one thing against which it is absolutely powerless, and that is feminine fashions. The diminution of the demand for our wool, not only here but throughout the world is to be largely attributed to the fact that the ladies will no longer wear the lustre stuffs thatwere once so fashionable, so less lustre wool is required. There seems little prospect of a change in this respect, no one can hasten its coming or foresee its epoch. Hence the safest course would be to grow the kind of wool that is most wanted.

The National Policy has done some good for our farmers by encouraging the more extensive manufacture in Canada of blankets and other articles for which long wool is used, but neither it nor any other legislation can make the ladies wear what they do not like. For sheep to be profitable they must be of the kind producing the wool which is in demand.

TAXING BANKS, &C.

THE decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that Quebec (and of course the other Provinces) has the right to tax banks, railways, and other joint stock companies of similar nature, is a final decision of the meaning of the British North America Act in that respect.

There remains the question of the wisdom of using that right, and the effect of such taxes. It by no means follows that because a right exists it is judicious to exercise it.

It is not at all probable that the companies will pay these taxes (estimated at a quarter of a million a year), out of their revenue, if they can avoid doing so. They can avoid this, wholly or in part, in three different ways. The might place the burden on their customers by raising discounts, premiums, freights, &c., so as to net the amount of the tax, a method which would show the impost to be in effect, if not in the eye of the law, indirect taxation. They might place the burden on the individual shareholders, by deducting from their dividends their quota of the amount, again having much the appearance of direct taxation. Or lastly they might remove their head offices and as much of their business as possible to some Province that would welcome them more hospitably.

Any attempt at extorsion would soon work its own cure, in spite of the evident alarm of these institutions. They need not remain to be fleeced, though they might reluctantly consent to pay moderate sums to the Province in addition to their municipal taxation, rather than incur the inconvenience of removal. No Province could afford to persist in driving capital outside its limits.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT NORTHFIELD.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—The meeting to celebrate Dominion Day of which I spoke in my first letter, was very successful. British subjects from different parts of the world met to pray for God's blessing on our Dominion, followed by short addresses from Prof. Henry Drummond of Edinburgh University, Rev. Mr. Henderson of Jamaica, and a student from Cambridge University. After the National Anthem had been sung, cheers were given for the British and American flags.

The Summer School is now in full swing. About 400 young men have already come and many more are expected this week.

Prof. Towner and his wife (who are to be in Toronto for six weeks in the fall) conduct the singing admirably. Mr. Sankey is also here, and sings an occasional solo. Last night he sang the famous "Ninet, and Nine," and said that in the room was a man who had been converted by the singing of the hymn here a few years ago, while sitting in his house on the opposite side of the Connecticut River. Prof. Drummond has taken the students by storm. His genial, unassuming manner, and the beauty and clearness of his thoughts, expressed in pleasing diction, make him a general favorite. I am glad to say that he will spend some time in Canada, and may visit Peterborough. I give a specimen or two of his crisp utterances: "God is for quality, and man is for quantity." "The immediate want of the age is not more men, but a better 'brand' of them." "We trust people as we get to know them, therefore the way to increase our faith is to increase our intimacy with Him."

H. Clay Trumbull, the editor of the "Sunday School Times," is another favorite. He is of a very humorous temperament, and having travelled extensively, and having been imprisoned four times in the American civil war, has a large stock of incidents to draw from. He is especially good in explaining difficult passages of scripture, and in throwing light on the Bible out of his wide knowledge of Oriental manners and customs.

No two sessions are alike, Mr. Moody's wonderful versatility showing itself at every step. He has no programme, and there is not a particle of starch in the whole gathering. Generally each morning there are two addresses bearing directly on the personal study of the Bible. No meetings are held in the afternoon, it being entirely given to recreation. In the evening another address is given. Everything is so fresh and breezy, that in spite of the extremely hot weather there is little sense of weariness. At 6 a. m. Mr. Moody meets those who get up so early to have a short Bible study, of which he never tires. At 8.30 a. m. a meeting especially for college students is held, at which the claims of the general secretaryship of the Young Men's Christian Association is pressed upon them. At 6.30 in the evening a Young Men's Christian Association Conference is held. There are several smaller meetings daily for prayer, &c.

Among the more prominent men who are now here are Dr. L. W. Munhall, who will conduct evangelistic meetings in Toronto in September; Mr. Schiveres, so well known in Peterborough; Dr. Dowkontt, superintendent of the New York Medical Mission, and Mr. M. H. Hodder, of Hodder & Stoughton, the London publishers. It is very hard to give a definite idea of the great value of such a gathering as this, but when it is considered that in the past year 2,000 (two thousand) students in American and Canadian colleges have decided to give themselves to foreign missionary work as the direct result of this conference last year, and that this missionary spirit is just as strong or stronger at the present one, it will be realized what important gatherings they are. The feature of this year's conference will probably be that Young Men's Christian Associations will be organized in the large cities of heathendom, and General Secretaries sent from this continent to take charge of them. A returned missionary asked for five such men for India this morning, and the response showed that the work has already begun, and will probably grow fast.

MR. BUTTERWORTH'S COURSE.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—I thank you for the considerate way in which you treated my letter in yesterday's issue of the REVIEW. Some one has wisely said that "no one should quarrel with an editor or a woman." Many persons who have disregarded this sound advice have suddenly fallen upon hornets' nests. But we are not going to quarrel. It is well that important public questions can be discussed in a friendly spirit. The object of such discussions is to draw out the truth and let both sides be heard. Some one may say, and justly say, that I am bold to "draw the sword," or, if you please, "wield the pen," against so powerful and practised an opponent. Well, it is better to run the risk of losing a little blood than to act the part of a coward

Will you permit me, in answer to the complaint that the Hon. Mr. Butterworth came to this country to urge the adoption of Commercial Union before he tried to persuade his own people in the United States to favor the scheme, to give an extract from his great speech on Commercial Union between Canada and the United States before the Canadian Club in New York, at which there was a large gathering of ladies and gentlemen.

"As a step in the right direction, during the last days of the Forty-ninth Congress I introduced a bill which provided for securing full, complete and unrestricted trade and commerce between sixty million of people of the United States and five millions of Canadians, who are not only our kinsmen, but who are our nearest neighbors—in fact, to all intents and purposes, of our very household." * * *

"It is suggested that there is some doubt as to how this proposition would be received by the American people—I speak of the citizens of the United States—First, it is not a party question. It has been received with general favor by the leading journals in all parts of the land."

The fact in itself that Mr. Butterworth came to this country to advocate the policy of his bill is, in my mind, a proof that it was in Canada he looked for opposition.

Yours truly,

W. CLUXTON.

WHO PAYS THE DUTY?

The great question of who paid the duty has been solved at last. Wiman paid the duty upon those Orangeville fireworks. He paid it at Brampton, too.—Toronto World.

SHOULD BE REMEMBERED.

The best thing Manitoba can do is to exercise a reasonable degree of patience; the time is not far distant when she will get all she wants, and in the meantime let her reflect that the expenditure of the largest amount of public money lavished on any Canadian enterprise has made civilization possible within her borders.—Monetary Times.

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

How to gain Health and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk. Delicate people improve rapidly upon its use. For consumption, throat affections and bronchitis it is unequalled. Dr. Thos. Prim, Alta says: "I used Scott's Emulsion on a child eight months old; he gained four pounds in a month." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00. A large treatise on Diseases of Women, profusely illustrated with colored plates and numerous wood-cuts, sent for 10 cents in stamps. Address, WOMEN'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

SICK HEADACHE, Bilious Headache, and Constipation, promptly cured by Dr. Pierce's Pellets. 25c. a vial, by druggists.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

"Capt. Niel," he said, "you and I have had some differences in the past. I hope that the service I am doing you will prove that I, for one, bear no malice. I will go further. As I told you before, I was to blame in that affair in the inn yard at Wakkerstroom. Let us shake hands and end what we cannot mend," and he stepped forward and extended his hand.

Jess turned to see what would happen. She knew the whole story, and hoped he would not take the man's hand; then, remembering their position, she hoped he would.

John turned color a little, and then deliberately drew himself up and put his hand behind his back.

"I am very sorry, Mr. Muller," he said, "but even in our present position I cannot shake hands with you; you well know why."

Jess saw a flush of the furious passion, which was his weak point, spread itself over the Boer's face.

"I do not know, Capt. Niel. Be so good as to explain."

"Very well, I will," said John, calmly. "You tried to assassinate me."

"What do you mean!" thundered Muller.

"What I say. You shot at me twice under pretense of firing at a buck. Look here!"—and he took up his soft black hat, which he still had—"here is the mark of one of your bullets! I did not know about it then; I do now, and I decline to shake hands with you."

By this time Muller's fury had got the better of him. "You shall answer for that, you English liar!" he said, at the same time clapping his hand to his belt, in which his hunting knife was placed. Thus for a few seconds they stood face to face. John never flinched or moved. There he stood, quiet and strong as some old stubby tree, his plain, honest face and watchful eye affording a strange contrast to the beautiful but demoniacal countenance of the great Dutchman. Presently he spoke in measured tones.

"I have proved myself a better man than yourself once, Frank Muller, and if necessary I will again, notwithstanding that knife of yours. But, in the meantime, I wish to remind you that I have a pass signed by your own general guaranteeing our safety. And now, Mr. Muller," with a flash of the blue eyes, "I am ready." The Dutchman drew the knife and then replaced it in its sheath. For a moment he was minded to end the matter then and there, but suddenly remembered, even in his rage, that there was a witness.

"A pass from the general!" he said, forgetting his caution in his fury; "much good a pass from the general is likely to be to you. You are in my power, man! If I choose to close my hand I can crush you. But there—there," he added, checking himself, "perhaps I ought to make allowances. You are one of a defeated people, and no doubt are sore, and say what you do not mean. Anyhow, there is an end of it, especially in the presence of a lady. Some day we may be able to settle our trouble like men, Capt. Niel; till then, with your permission, we will let it drop."

"Quite so, Mr. Muller," said John, "only you must not ask me to shake hands with you."

"Very good, Capt. Niel; and now, if you will allow me, I will tell the boy to get your horses in; we must be getting on if we are to reach Heidelberg to-night." And he bowed himself out, feeling that his temper had once more endangered the success of his plans. "Curse the man!" he said to himself, "he is what those English call a gentleman. It was brave of him to refuse to take my hand when he is in my power."

"John," said Jess, as soon as the door had closed, "I am afraid of that man. If I had understood that he had anything to do with the pass I would not have taken it. I thought that the writing was familiar to me. Oh, dear! I wish we had stopped at Pretoria."

"What can't be cured must be endured," said John, again. "The only thing to do is to make the best of it, and get on as we can. You will be all right anyhow, but he hates me like poison. I suppose that it is on account of Bessie."

"Yes, that's it," said Jess; "he is madly in love with Bessie, or was."

"It is curious to think that a man like that can be in love," remarked John, as he lit his pipe, "but it only shows what queer mixtures people are. I say, Jess, if this fellow hates me so, what made him give me the pass, eh? What's his game?"

Jess shook her head as she answered, "I don't know, John; I don't like it."

"I suppose he can't mean to murder me; he did try it on once, you know."

"Oh, no, John," she answered, with a sort of cry, "not that."

"Well, I don't know that it would matter much," he said, with an approach to cheerfulness which was rather a failure. "It would save one a deal of worry, and only anticipate things a bit. But there, I frightened you, and I dare say that he is, for the present, at any rate, an honest man, and has no intentions on my person. Look! there is Mouti calling us. I wonder if those brutes have given him anything to eat. We'll collar the rest of this leg of mutton on chance. At any rate, Frank Muller sha'n't starve me to death," and with a cheerful laugh he left the room.

In a few minutes they were on their road again. As they started Frank Muller came up, took off his hat and informed them that he would probably join them on the morrow below Heidelberg, in which town they would find every preparation to enable them to spend the night comfortably. If he did not join them it would be because he was detained on duty. In that case the two men had his orders to escort them safely to Mooifontein, and, he added significantly, "I do not think you will be troubled with any further impoliteness."

In another moment he had galloped off on his great black horse, leaving the pair considerably mystified and not a little relieved.

[To be continued.]

The President on Horseback.

The president, it is said, has yielded to the advice of his friends, and will take to horsemanship as a means of exercise. Secretaries Bayard, Lamar, Whitney and Fairchild have described to him the benefit they derive from equestrianism, and he has consented to join them in some of their gallops across the country. Secretary Bayard rides a big bay horse with banged tail, and every fair afternoon he joins Secretary Fairchild or George Bancroft, the venerable historian, in a canter through the soldiers' home and the adjacent roads. Secretary Whitney usually rides with a party of young people, and none of them enjoy a spurt more than he does. Secretary Lamar directs his horse to be saddled and at his office every clear afternoon at 4:40 o'clock, from whence he explores the surrounding country until it is time to return home to dinner.

Mrs. Cleveland is said to be delighted with the idea of her husband taking to horseback riding, and she promises to join him in the sport. She has attended both of the recent "paper chases," and is ambitious to join some of the gay riding parties which are constantly being made up in society. A well known New York instructor in horsemanship, who is now in this city, has formed a large class in fashionable circles, which has given quite a boom to horseback riding. The seal browns are not well adapted for saddle horses, and early additions to the White House stables may be looked for.—Baltimore Sun.

A Hint for the Showman.

I have found out the secret of the greyhounds' race at Olympia. The marvel how animals so notoriously wanting in the intelligence which is generally characteristic of the canine kind should be trained to a contest of speed without an object, such as a hare, in front of them is a marvel no longer. One exceptional hound is taught to run, and, this educational difficulty once surmounted, the rest is very simple. As soon as he is off the others follow. Let it be noticed that he is in front all the way. Now, as regards the riderless horses, there is a question I should like to see decided by experiment. Would any one of these animals go faster with a man or boy on his back? It would be a pretty trial. Let each of the field in turn be ridden by a good jockey. It is my belief that skill and judgment would outmatch freedom and the incentive of the dangling balls that spur each unburdened steed, and would also be more than a compensation for the rider's weight.—London World.

Ridicule of the Code.

Since the war dueling has almost disappeared in this section of the country, and any attempt to revive it has been met with merciless ridicule. What originally started the fashion of laughing at duels was a quarrel which arose between two Georgia editors in 1806. They were opposed to each other on some question of municipal government, and from generalities the controversy developed into personalities of the bitterest description. After all kinds of personal abuse a challenge was given and a duel was looked for by all who had followed the course of the dispute. But the challenged party refused to accept, on the ground that his opponent was not a "whole man," having lost a leg, and that for a whole man to fight against a fragmentary one would not be fair. The ludicrousness of this explanation of his refusal se. the state in a roar of laughter, and from that day dueling disappeared.—Globe-Democrat.

Through the Canal by Night.

Everybody knows it is quite a common thing for a big steamer to go through the Suez canal at night. But what is, perhaps, not so generally known, is the the steamer itself, and not the Suez Canal company, has to supply the requisite electric light apparatus for the nocturnal passage. What the company does is to prescribe the amount of illuminating power which the ap aratus must possess. For instance, no steamer is allowed to start on a night transit that is not fitted with an "electric projector" which is capable of throwing a light for at least 1,200 meters ahead. And on the upper deck, too, there must be an electric lamp and shade powerful enough to light up a circular area some 600 meters in circumference. Big steamers are beginning to carry this apparatus, but there is a company both at Port Said and Port Tewfik which lets out the necessary projectors and lamps on hire.—Kansas City Times.

A New Society Jargon.

The society girls here do not consider it the proper thing to speak English with the slightest "age" of Americanism. A year ago society unanimously adopted what is known as the English accent, and to an outsider there was not much of any difference between the talk that one hears in London and Washington. Now, however, by some peculiar and inexplicable twist the ladies are all doing their best to speak English with a French accent, while the gentlemen still try to be as Cockney as of old. The result is more than laughable. The jargon to one not accustomed to it is more than distressing. It took society some time to "catch on" to the change, but the transformation is now very nearly complete. It is understood that the Misses West, the daughters of the English minister, are the leaders in this, the very latest fad.—Washington Cor. Boston Traveller.

A Shocking Accident.

KINGSTON, July 7.—A painful accident occurred yesterday at Cushendale, near the city, at a new Catholic church in course of erection. A pig got loose from a neighboring property, and was being chased about the church and escaping capture. The workmen engaged in the sport, and one named John Gordon, sliding down a pully from the scaffold to the around had just got on his feet when a horse attached to the other end of the rope became frightened and plunged ahead. As a result the pully hook caught Gordon in the lower part of the abdomen and ripped the flesh so badly as to almost disembowel him. At the same time he was drawn up to the scaffold and suffered excruciatingly until released.

Give them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery is is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

The German Bundesrath has recinded its recent order against the exportation of horses from Germany, and despatches from Vienna state that the council of Austro-Hungarian Ministers propose to rescind the order prohibiting the exportation of horses from Austria-Hungary.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Refrigerators.

Breeze & Bain offer the balance of their stock of Refrigerators at greatly reduced prices. 1d7

The Pearl.

The little steamer Pearl was brought up to town on Friday and some repairs are being made to her machinery. When they are completed she will be put on her route.

Enjoyment in Peterborough.

The Coldwater Tribune says:—"Mr. W. J. Lovering has returned, after having put in a felicitous time in the soon to-be city of Peterborough."

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Erastus Wiman.

This prominent advocate of Commercial Union will not likely visit our town, but it is a very sure thing that Rowse's Satin Merveilleux at 65c is as good as other houses sell at $1. Go and see them.

County Council.

A special meeting of the County Council was held to-day. Mr. H. T. Strickland was appointed arbitrator of criminal justice accounts for the County, and some minor matters were attended to.

Annual Sermon.

The Rev. I. Tovell will preach the annual sermon to the Orangemen and True Blues of Peterborough district in St. Paul's Church on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. A collection will be taken up in aid of the Peterborough Protestant Home.

FOR harvest mitts at bed-rock prices call at TURNBULL'S.

Lawn Social.

A lawn social will be given at the residence of Mr. D. W. Dumble on Thursday evening next, July 14th, under the auspices of the Mission Band of the George Street Methodist Church. The Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance. Admission 10 cents. 3d7

Division Court.

A session of the Division Court was held on Friday afternoon, Judge Weller presiding. Twelve cases were down for hearing, and six were adjourned. The court was over between 3 and 4 o'clock, the shortest session of this court held for some time.

Double Tracking.

Work is proceeding at three points on the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway in laying the second track between Toronto and Montreal. When the construction of this second line is completed the Grand Trunk will be able to push through freight much faster.

LADIES' panniers with skirt fronts, also the latest improved shapes in bustles, just received at TURNBULL'S.

A Runaway.

A horse attached to a baker's waggon ran away at the corner of George and Simcoe streets on Friday night, being frightened by a wheel running off. The boy who was driving was thrown out, but held to lines and succeeded in stopping the horse when it was dangerously near a plate glass window.

Accepted a Call.

The Lindsay Warder says:—"Rev. Mr. Cooper of Cambray has accepted to call from Hastings on the river Trent at the east end of Rice Lake—a beautiful situation. The village is partly on Peterborough and partly on Northumberland shore, but belongs to Northumberland for municipal purposes. He leaves many friends in Cambray district who wish him success and happiness in his new home. He leaves this week."

Ashburnham Council.

A meeting of the Ashburnham Council was held on Monday, July 4th. There were present the Reeve, in the chair, and Councillors Calcutt, Craig, Anderson and Wand. After routine, By Law No. 156 to empower the Reeve and Treasurer to borrow money to meet the current expenditure of the Village received its several readings and passed. The following accounts were ordered to be paid:—

MAKING PROGRESS.

The Short Railway to Connect the Grand Trunk and Grand Junction.

The work on the mile and three-quarters of railway, which will run through the south part of the town and connect the Grand Trunk with the Grand Junction, is progressing. The road is graded from the junction at Downer's corners to the river, and on this side from the river to Lock street, where the line crosses that street at the corner of Ware street.

The piers for the bridge across the Otonabee have been built up to the bridge seat level, and work will be commenced at once on the pivot pier of the bridge. The stone for the bridge, which is excellent material, is brought from a quarry near Foxboro on the Grand Junction and carried down to the Little Lake on a siding built in Ashburnham, from which point it is conveyed down the lake and river to the bridge.

Track laying commenced to day from the junction at Downer's towards the river, and when the rails are laid as far as the Beaver Mead creek the bridge across that stream will be constructed. The bottom of the river is very hard, and dynamite had to be used in excavating for the piers, but they will have a solid foundation.

Several buildings were on the edge of the road. A barn was moved at Downer's, two houses between Lock street and the river were found to be in the way, and a couple of houses at Lake street will be moved.

POLICE COURT.

DRUNK.

FRIDAY, July 8.—Charles Bird was charged by Constable Pigeon with having been drunk in a public place, and he admitted the truthfulness of the charge. The Magistrate remarked that it was contrary to the usages of the town to see persons drunk, and that it shocked the sensibilities of the people, but on Bird promising to leave town at once he was allowed to fly.

The Rifle.

The second monthly match of the Rifle Association was held on Thuraday, the ranges being 200, 400, 500 and 600 yards, five shots at each range. The wind was high and blowing from a quarter that made good shooting difficult. The following is the score:—

An Annuity for Mrs. Tassie.

After the death of Dr. Tassie, Principal of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute and formerly Principal of the Galt Collegiate Institute, a movement was set on foot to establish a memorial fund to provide an annuity for his widow. Former pupils and old friends responded liberally, with the result that $2610 was subscribed, $1638 being received in Toronto and $971 in Hamilton. The subscriptions were received from all parts of Ontario and from places in the Northwest, Quebec, United States and one from Gibraltar. An annuity of $340 was purchased from the North American Insurance Company and presented to Mrs. Tassie at Peterborough last week. The letter accompanying the certificate was signed by Edward Martin, John Billings, Charles Cockshutt, T. H. Stinson, R. O. Mackay, H. G. Hopkirk, John Eastwood, Rev. D. J. Macdonnell and Wm. Davidson.

Confirmation.

The Lord Bishop of Toronto is now in Peterborough at St. John's parsonage. On Sunday morning he will administer the rite of confirmation at St. John's Church at the eleven o'clock service. In the evening he will administer the same rite at St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham.

Great Excitement.

Hundreds shot into that Cheap Cash Store on George street known as Rowse's Trade Palace, and bought $1 silks for 65c. Dress goods at half price and $3 parasols for $1.50. Their cheap goods astonish everybody.

During July and August, you can buy goods at very low prices at Rowse's Trade Palace. Almost every article is being sold at sweeping reductions in price.

A Close Call.

A corner pole of the arch at the corner of Water and Hunter streets, while being bent down this afternoon, broke and struck a waggon which was passing, and the driver, Mr. Turner, narrowly escaped receiving a very severe blow.

For Peterborough.

The Lakefield Chronicle says:—"The members of Beresford Lodge, No. 122 L. O. L., will meet in their hall at 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning for business, after which they will take train for Peterborough there to join in the big celebration of the 12th in that town."

Personal.

The Lindsay Warder says:—"Dr. Bonnell of Bobcaygeon returned on Wednesday from a tour of the St. Lawrence and the Eastern States. He brought home a noble mastiff, considered one of the finest in America. The doctor already had a fine one, but this caps all."

Among the distinguished visitors coming here in August we notice the name of Lieut.-Col. M. D. Dawson, of the 7th Battalion, London. Col Dawson is the Grand Scribe of the Grand Encampment of Ontario.

Courtesy Appreciated.

Mr. John Kelly, the obliging and efficient Superintendent of the Little Lake Cemetery, has received the following letter, which explains itself:—

"PETERBOROUGH, June 30th, 1887.

"Mr. John Kelly, Supt. Little Lake Cemetery:

"DEAR SIR,—I am instructed in behalf of Otonabee Lodge of Oddfellows to tender you the unanimous and cordial thanks of the officers and members for the valuable assistance rendered by you on the occasion of the annual decoration of the graves of their deceased brethren at the Little Lake Cemetery, June 28th, 1887,

"Yours respectfully,

"E. E. HENDERSON.

"Acting Secy."

A Large Brick Block.

A new brick block will ere long occupy the space on the corner of Charlotte and Water streets, across the street from the Market square. It will be built by the Chamberlin estate, and the plans are being prepared by Mr. W. Blackwell, architect. The building will be 114 by 60 feet, and three stories high. There will be two stores on the west side of it, each about 15 feet wide and 64 feet deep. The remainder of the building, including the two upper flats over the stores, will be used for an hotel, and Mr. T. Cavanagh, of the Stewart House, Hunter street, will occupy it. The main hall of the hotel will be 20 feet wide. In the rear of it there will be a billiard room 35 x 25 feet. On the corner of Water street there will be a large reading room and anti-rooms. To the right of the hall a large dining room will be situated, with the kitchen in the rear. There will be a rear hall and stairs. From the principal hall there will be stairs up to the third story and the hall will be lighted by a glass dome in the roof. The second story will contain two parlors and bedrooms, and the third flat will be occupied by bedrooms and halls. Altogether the hotel will contain forty bedrooms. In the basement there will be bath rooms, etc. There will be spacious yard room in connection with the hotel, stabling for over fifty horses and commodious sheds. As soon as the plans are completed work will be commenced on the construction of the building.

LADIES' and children's parasols of every description, cheaper than the cheapest at TURNBULL'S.

CONFIRMATION.

The Bishop of Toronto Administers the Rite of Confirmation.

On Sunday morning, His Lordship the Bishop of the Diocese administered the holy rite of confirmation at St. John's Church, Peterborough.

After the reading of the morning service and litany by the Rector, the Rev. J. W. R. Beck, he presented the candidates to His Lordship.

The BISHOP delivered a charge to the candidates for the holy rite. He treated confirmation in its various aspects. First, they were taking upon themselves the service of God. Though human nature caused us to have a repugnance to be ranked as servants, he showed that the saints of God, as their proudest title, rejoiced to call themselves the servants of God; even our Lord made himself a servant. He dwelt upon the various ways in which these now being confirmed as members of the church might serve. Service in divine worship, in the partaking of the Holy Communion, the highest form of that service; service in the acts of their daily lives, dedicated to their Lord and Master, who had purchased their service by His life given for us; service in all the relations of their domestic lives, little things, perhaps, but as truly service as great acts; service by patient endurance of God's will—"they also serve who only stand and wait"; service in the love of their hearts for God, in the purity of their minds and thoughts; all these forms of service were plainly explained. They had not a choice of serving or not—they must either be servants of God or servants of the world, the flesh and the devil. The service of God was also freedom, for it was the service of love. There was now offered to them the great gift of the Holy Spirit, through which alone they could become the true servants, the soldiers of Christ. They were thus received as children of God, as inheritors of His Kingdom. Christ had promised that His servants should be with Him in glory hereafter, and they should so live as to fit themselves for that future. All had talents and opportunities given to them, and they should so act as to be able to give a good account of their stewardship, and hear the joyful words, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

The Bishop then laid his hands upon each of the candidates to the number of 25, several of them being adults.

The anti-communion service was said by the Bishop, the Rector reading the epistle.

During the offertory an anthem, "My God, My Father, Whilst I Stray," was sung, and throughout the service the hymns selected were specially appropriated to the holy, apostolic rite.

ST. LUKE'S, ASHBURNHAM.

In the evening the Bishop of Toronto took part in the service at St. Luke's, Ashburnham.

After the creed the Rector, the Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, presented the candidates for the holy rite of confirmation, 19 in number.

The Bishop delivered an address to the candidates on the responsibilities they were assuming and the privileges they were receiving in this apostolic rite. He then confirmed them with laying on of hands, and concluding the service gave them the episcopal benediction.

During the collection of the offertory an appropriate anthem was sung. There was a large congregation.

This being the eleventh anniversary of St. Luke's Church, the Rev. Mr. Bradshaw in his sermon in the morning referred to this epoch in the history of the parish, and dwelt upon the satisfactory progress that had been made.

THE BULGARIAN DIFFICULTY.

Will Prince Ferdinand be Accepted—Russian Obstinacy—Cloudy Outlook.

LONDON, July 9.—The Cabinet at its meeting spent three hours discussing the Bulgarian question on the aspect it has assumed since the election by the Sobranje of Prince Ferdinand. England for various and obvious reasons has been anxious to keep out of the Bulgarian muddle, and the election of Prince Ferdinand is undoubtedly an incubus to the Government. To refuse to accept his election it cannot and still be consistent, while to accept it would still further complicate other questions which still remain open between Great Britain and Russia. Of course, if pressed to the necessity of definitely endorsing the action of the Bulgarian Assembly or of rejecting Ferdinand's claims to the Bulgarian rulership, England would decide in favor of the former course, but she would rather not be forced to do either. It is announced that Prince Ferdinand intends to pay a visit to London shortly and the character of his reception here will go a long way toward committing England in the eyes of the powers to one position or the other. The fact that Prince Ferdinand is a Catholic would under any circumstances militate against the chances of Russia's recognition of his claims since their orthodoxy is insisted upon as an essential qualification in the estimation of the Czar's Government for the occupant of the Bulgarian throne; but there is a lurking suspicion that were his Austrian friends less strong and his relationship to the reigning family of England less close the peculiarities of his religious faith might be overlooked. The Pall Mall Gazette, which paper takes the gloomiest view of the situation of any of the great journals, declares that the ascension of Ferdinand to the throne of Bulgaria will be productive of the direst results.

THE DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG.

LONDON, July 10.—The Duke of Saxe-Coburg is reported to have consented to Prince Ferdinand's assuming the Bulgarian throne. Prince Ferdinand has had an interview with Prince Alexander, the former ruler of Bulgaria. All the Bulgarian towns were illuminated last night in honor of Prince Ferdinand's election.

THE CZAR'S PERMISSION.

VIENNA, July 10.—Prince Ferdinand started for St. Petersburg on Saturday to solicit the Czar's consent to his acceptance of the Bulgarian throne.

RESIGNATION OF THE REGENTS.

TIRNOVA, July 10.—The Regents have tendered their resignation to the Sobranje on the ground that their task was completed by the election of Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg to the Bulgarian throne. The Sobranje refused to accept the resignation, desiring to await the return of the delegates who started to-day to visit Prince Ferdinand at Vienna.

BISMARCKIAN POLICY.

BERLIN, July 10.—The talk of the diplomatic circles associates Prince Ferdinand's election with the probable development of an active Bismarckian policy against Russia. The Government press does not cease warning investors against the uncertainty of Russian securities.

RUSSIA OPPOSES.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—The Russian newspapers unanimously disapprove of the election of Prince Ferdinand to the Bulgarian throne. They all pronounce the choice of him by the Sobranje the result of Austro-German intrigue, and urge the powers to recall their representatives from Sofia. The Novoe Vremya says Russia in no case will allow Prince Ferdinand to go to Sofia, and adds that if he arrives there with an Austrian escort Russia will tell Austria to keep her hands off.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

A Berlin View—France Forcing Germany Into War.

BERLIN, July 10.—If the temper of the German press were a faithful reflection of the disposition of the Government a war with France would be a question of a few days. The revelations at the Klein trial, the French tax on foreigners, which is openly designed to effect Germans, and the prohibitive import on German spirits, have the combined effect of incensing the people to the utmost. The latter measures by themselves have been held of less account, but, associated with the spy trials, they have heightened the general sense that French enmity is implacable, and that it seeks to wound the Germans where it can, waiting a chance to inflict the deadliest injury. The trial of Klein is the fifth treason trial in which clear proof was afforded that the French War Ministry has organized a system of espionage. A worse case than any revealed is under inquiry. An employee of the Central Administration at Strasbourg is about to be tried at Leipsic. He is charged with selling to the French War Office all of the official reports sent to the Chief Administrator of Alsace by his various subordinates. The completeness of this system of espionage suggests that treason is still at work, and that any moment may bring further revelations. Official irritation equals that of the public.

Arrival of Trains.

The trains on the railways will arrive in town to-morrow as follows:—From Toronto and intermediate points by Canadian Pacific railway 11.31 a. m.; from Tweed and intermediate points, by the same railway, 8.39 a. m.; from Lindsay by Grand Trunk, 10.25; from Franklin by same railway, 8.50 a. m.; from Lakefield by same railway, 10.45 a. m.; from Cobourg and Port Hope by same road, 11,10 a. m.; from Campbellford by same railway, 10.20 a. m.; from Belleville and intermediate points, by same railway, 11.30.

A Big Crowd.

Everything points to there being a big crowd in town to-morrow. It is estimated that between 5,000 and 6,000 visitors will be here. Preparations have been in progress all day to provid evarious kinds of accomodation for the visitors.

LATEST CABLE NEWS

A PRECARIOUS POSITION.

LONDON, July 9.—An Egyptian officer who participated in the defence of Khartoum and an Arab merchant who assisted General Gordon when that city was besieged, have arrived at Suakim from Berber. They report that the Khalif's position is precarious, and his influence diminishing. They say that the rebels have taken Kordofan and are besieging Omdurman. The tribes are incensed at the Mahdi's oppression.

IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 9.—The endorsement of the Government's Land Bill by the Unionists has widened the breach between the Liberals beyond repair. The Unionists having cut loose entirely from the Gladstonians, leaving not a single cord to indicate that they were ever bound together, feel that they must retain the balance of power or go to the wall. To lose their identity by merging with the Tory party is not to be thought of, since such a move would be suicidal to every prominent member of the party, and a new election would be equally fatal to them as a party, in the present temper of the people. Their acceptance, in its entirety, of the Land Bill, shows that in order to avoid dissolution and retain the balance of power, they will accept anything.

NOISY ADMIRERS.

PARIS, July 9.—On the occasion of General Boulanger's departure for Clement-Ferrand yesterday, where he will assume command of his corps, an immense crowd assembled at the railway station for the purpose of making a demonstration in his honor. The crowd was composed mostly of young men and boys, and was very noisy. Cheer after cheer went up as the General made his appearance, and shouts of "Vive Boulanger" were heard on all sides. The police were compelled to interfere to prevent the enthusiasm of the crowd from leading it into riotous acts, and several of the crowd were arrested.

THE NEW PRINCE.

LONDON, July 9.—The Duke of Saxe-Coburg is reported to have consented to Prince Ferdinand's assuming the Bulgarian throne. Prince Ferdinand has had an interview with Prince Alexander, the former ruler of Bulgaria. All the Bulgarian towns were illuminated last night in honor of Prince Ferdinand's election.

MADRID, July 9.—Queen Christina gave audience to the Duke of Edinburgh and invited him to attend a royal banquet today.

TRIAL OF ARARCHISTS.

BERLIN, July 9.—The great Anarchist trial, involving the Socialists of Hamburg, Berlin and Leipsic, will begin here on the 18th inst., before the Imperial tribunal. The case of Brueckner and others, charged with treason, which has been under inquiry at Strasburg, has been transferred to Leipsic, and will be tried on the 25th inst.

SCHNAEBELE.

PARIS, July 9.—M. Schnaebele, the arrest of whom by German police came near being a casus belli between France and Germany, has been appointed to a higher position at Laon. He wanted to be again placed on the frontier, but this the Government refused to do.

NO SPEEDY REUNION.

LONDON, July 9.—Lord Hartington has written a letter in which he says that the reference made by Mr. Gladstone in his Swansea speech to the retention of the Parnellites at Westminster in the event of Home Rule being granted does not encourage the hope of a speedy reunion of the Liberals and Liberal-Unionists.

PADDINGTON ELECTION.

LONDON, July 9.—Although the Liberals failed to elect their candidate in the Paddington election they claim that the result is a moral victory for them. The Daily News is jubilant over the result. The Daily Telegraph says the Gladstonian gain was probably due to the Cass affair, while the Morning Post attributes it to the popularity of Mr. Routledge, the Gladstonian candidate. The Standard says the Paddington result need occasion neither surprise nor concern when all the circumstances are taken into account. Looking at the position generally it may be said that the National league is a dangerous despotism. Possibly before the year is out those English politicians who have been duped by its devices will confess that it is a discreditable imposture.

THE VATICAN MISSION.

DUBLIN, July 10.—Father Gualdi, who accompanied Mgr. Persico in the special Papal mission to Ireland, states that Mgr. Persico will first obtain all possible information from the Roman Catholic Bishops of Ireland. He will then be happy to receive any other information on the subject of his enquiry, no matter from what source it may be offered, and he will listen to all persons desiring to expound their views on the questions before the country, regarding either education, the land or politics. Mgr. Persico and Father Gualdi will visit all the important cities of Ireland. It is impossible at present, says Father Gualdi, to state how long they will remain in Ireland.

GIFT TO MR. GLADSTONE.

LONDON, July 10.—Yesterday afternoon at Dollis Hill, in the presence of a large number of guests invited by Mrs. Gladstone to a garden party, the American testimonial to Mr. Gladstone was formally presented to the ex-Premier and afterwards exhibited by him to the guests. The presentation speech was made by Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, of New York.

PARNELLISM AND CRIME.

LONDON, July 10.—An anonymous letter published in yesterday's Times calls the attention of that paper to what the writer declares to be the fact, that its articles on "Parnellism and Crime" have seriously perturbed the Parnellites and their allies in America, particularly the Irish World. The writer says the issue of the Irish World of June 18 shows that Patrick Ford's London correspondent, "Trans-Atlantic," has slunk away owing to the imminence of coercion.

TIME ALLOWED.

LONDON, July 10.—The Government has allowed the Sultan five days longer in which to consider his ratification of the Egyptian Convention.

SUING THE "TIMES."

LONDON, July 10.—Mr. F. H. O'Donnell has commenced a libel action against the Times, claiming damages because of charges made against him by that journal in its articles on "Parnellism and Crime."

TO RESIST EVICTION.

CORK, July 10.—The members of Parliament from Cork have called a convention of the Irish-National League to meet here on the 17th inst., to devise means to enable tenants to resist eviction.

HANDSOME ENDOWMENT.

EDINBURGH, July 9.—Mr. Andrew Carnegie yesterday laid the foundation stone of the new free library building in Edinburgh, for the endowment of which he donated $250,000. Mr. Blain was present and made an address.

AMENDMENT WANTED.

LONDON, July 9.—Lord Hartington is urging the Government to accept an amendment to he Land Bill providing relief for tenants now paying excessive rents, in the spirit of the recommendations of the Cowper Commission.

AN ORANGE ORATOR COMING.

An Ulster Orangeman to Lecture in Canada and New York.

LONDON, July 10.—On Thursday, about the hour when Mr. William O'Brien first took his seat in the House of Commons, to which he was elected during his absence, the Rev. Dr. MacBeth, of Enniscorthy, was embarking on the Celtic for New York and Canada, whether he goes as an Orange orator to undo the mischief Mr. O'Brien has wrought in the Dominion. Dr. MacBeth was in Canada two years ago, speaking then, however, on theological topics. Now he is to address meetings in Toronto, Montreal, Kingston, Hamilton and London against Home Rule. The Orangemen of New York have invited him to lecture there, and the probabilities are that he will do so if he finds time in his two months' tour. This is here interpreted as an indication that Mr. O'Brien really did effect something by his Canadian venture.

REVIEW AT ALDERSHOT.

The Queen Reviews Sixty Thousand Soldiers—A Jubilee Address.

LONDON, July 9.—The Queen yesterday reviewed 60,000 soldiers at Aldershot. Her Majesty was received with great enthusiasm. A large number of stands had been erected at the point of the review, and they were all packed with fashionable and aristocratic people. Many volunteers who took part in the review came from long distances, and travelled all night in order to be present. The whole spectacle was very imposing. The review was a great success. The Duke of Cambridge, on behalf of the troops, presented Her Majesty with a Jubilee address, the men cheering heartily during the presentation. The marching of the men was splendid, and the guards, marines and volunteers were loudly cheered by the spectators.

GOLD ON LAKE SUPERIOR.

Discovery of a Fabulously Rich Vein Near Ishpeming, Mich.

ISHPEMING, Mich., July 9.—Six weeks ago the Lake Superior company began exploring their lands for gold. Yesterday the explorers found an eight inch vein of quartzite carrying free gold in immense quantities. The ore was brought to the city and assayed. It was found to be fabulously rich in the precious metal. When the quartz is broken the gold will hold it together. The discovery has been kept quiet and this is the first notice of it given to the public. The news will have the effect of sending hundreds of explorers into the gold belt south of Ishpeming and Negaunee.

A Theatre Holocaust.

HURLEY, Wis., July 10.—A fire broke out on the stage of the Alcazer theatre at eight o'clock last night, and within an hour the entire business part of the town was in flames, while eleven persons perished in the theatre. The charred remains of nine people have been taken from the ruins. The loss is fully half a million dollars. The Alcazar was a variety theatre chiefly frequented by miners, and was one of the resorts of unsavory repute associated with the notorious dance houses of the mining regions.

The Wrong Men Hanged.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., July 9.—In August, 1884, George Smith, George Hughes, and Ashburg Hughes were hanged for burning a house belonging to one Porter on Sand Mountain. The men were all convicted on the testimony of the Porter woman, who swore positively against them. Adam Freeman was sent to the penitentiary a short time ago for forging an order for a pair of shoes. He took sick a few days ago, and yesterday, just before dying, called the officials and confessed that he had burned the Porter house.

COMMERCIAL ANNEXATION FIGURES.

At the meeting at Lindsay on July 2nd in favor of unrestricted trade with the United States, Mr. Thos. Shaw was the chief speaker. The Lindsay Post reports his speech at considerable length, and we may assume with accuracy. In this instance, as in others, we are astonished at the gross dishonesty with which these advocates of commercial annexation carry on their new scheme of attack upon the National Policy. Mr. Shaw deliberately falsified his figures by the million and then proceeded to base his "arguments" on these falsifications. We will give a few specimens. Speaking of barley, as to which he could fairly make a point, he was not content to do so, but asserted that we exported ten million bushel, an exaggeration to the extent of nearly a million and a half, for the Trade and Navigation Tables for 1886 show that we exported only 8,528,287 bushels to the United States. Of our export of horses to the States he said that the duty caused a loss of nearly $3,000,000 every year to our farmers. The same official records show that the total value of this export was only $2,-104,855. Even Mr. Shaw with his evident contempt for his audience could hardly think that they were stupid enough to suppose that $3,000,000 went for duties and only $104,855 to the farmers, but he hoped they would be foolish enough to believe him and not check his falsified figures. In regard to wool he was still more outrageous in his mendacity, asserting that Canada sends to the United States nearly 7,000,000 pounds while the official return for 1886 is 1,316,228 lbs., so he only committed a trifling error of over five million and two thirds. Coming to eggs he was less venturesome, only increasing the true figures, 12,708,883 dozen, to 14,000,000. To make up for this selfdenial, however, he proceeded to state that the total value of eggs exported more than exceeded the whole exports of all our manufacturing industries combined. Yet the truth is that the value of exported eggs was $1,792,579 and of exported manufactured goods was $2,824,137. And on the strength of this disgraceful falsehood he proceeded to jeer at all concerned in manufacturing and endeavoured to excite the animosity of the farmers against them, though in fact they consume far more eggs and other farm produce than are purchased by the United States and are far better customers.

We have not checked with the official returns all of Mr. Shaw's doctored statistics, but we have given our readers, who can easily pursue the investigation for themselves, a sufficient idea of his culpable dishonesty in thus dealing with an important subject. What can be thought of a cause which requires such advocacy? They have dropt, because exposed, their former falsehoods such as that the removal of the custom house would give our farmers several cents a pound more for their cheese, though in truth the price is a shade better if anything on this side of the St. Lawrence, but foiled in one misrepresentation they take up another in the hope to delude the unwary.

A FALLACY.

The Mail says that "In the case of British Columbia, a glance at the map is sufficient to show that it is nothing short of a crime against man and nature to compel the settlers there to trade by rail with markets 2,700 miles distant when he is within easy reach by water of Portland and San Francisco." If the Mail were right it would follow that it was quite willing to assist in committing a crime so long as it suited its purpose. But the fact is that the Mail has now adopted the absurdity of its new allies, that the place of export or distributing centre must be the market of a country. Why should British Columbia send its produce to the Atlantic, and why should it not find a better market for its coal, its timber, its fish, &c., on the Canadian prairies than at San Francisco? And why should not British Columbia get its cottons, its woollens, &c., from Ontario and Quebec as well as from New England by way of San Francisco? The Mail's argument is founded on an utter fallacy.

At the meeting at Lindsay of the socalled West Victoria Farmers Institute, the Post reports Mr. J. D. Naylor, of Fenelon, as saying that he saw very few Canadian-born farmers present in the rooms. As the Post in its remarks on the meeting does not contest this statement, nor does any subsequent speaker appear to have done so, we may suppose that it was admittedly correct. In this case as well as in others a few political wire pullers with a sprinkling of farmers assume to speak for the great farming community, ninety-nine out of a hundred of whom take no part in this artificial agitation.

In Montreal they seem to be very much agitated over the rise in the price of coal. They might have expected it, for the coal owners of Pennsylvania are a ring that is determined to exact the highest price that it can obtain in any particular locality. We generally recognize the wisdom of the policy of the Macdonald Administration, but we do not hold it to be infallible, and we believe that it made a great blunder in repealing the duty on anthracite coal, whereby our treasury was deprived of half a million dollars a year, which was put into the pockets of the Pennsylvania ring without any benefit to Canadian consumers.

We are told by the Mail that no leading Conservative journal has pronounced openly against Commercial Union. Since reading this remark we have carefully noticed the position taken by our contemporaries, and we find that not only all the leading Conservative journals, but even the despised organs in the backwoods, have taken a strong position of hostility to this movement, as is also the case with some of the more respectable Reform papers. On the other hand the Grit journals, including the Mail, are almost without exception in favour of this approach to annexation.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT NORTHFIELD.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—Those who originated this idea of a Bible school conducted by Mr. Moody might well say that it is an opportunity of a man's lifetime. The gathering together of over four hundred young men, mostly college students, from probably over 100 different institutions, would not have been possible in a previous period, and is only now possible because of the organization of the College Young Men's Christian Associations. Then this school has as its "professors" the leading men in the lines of Bible study on this continent. Besides those named previously, there are now here Prof. Townsend, of Boston, and Joseph Cook. Dr. Townsend in his early days was an atheist, and was led to accept Christianity by observing the analogy between the natural world and the teachings of the Bible. He methods of teaching are very clear. Yesterday he took up the history of Jonah, and his logic was irresistible as he showed that if the genuineness of this history be denied the whole of the miracles recorded in the Bible, including the resurrection of Christ, must likewise be denied. Of Joseph Cook nothing need be said. He arrived this morning and gave a brief address at the close of the session. Among other impressive utterances he gave the following: "God is great, and the consecrated young men of Europe and America to-day are His abode. There are now forty-five millions of people in the British Isles, and probably during the present generation there will be 100,000,000 people in this Republic. If this immense Anglo-Saxon race is to be kept from destruction the Christian young men of to-day must be the rudder of the future. I believe that there is coming military conflict with the saloon power. The whiskey syndicate was never so strongly organized as to-day. The traffic has 130 per cent profit on its sales and is not easily going to forfeit what it calls its rights. The labor conflict is extending, and the goverment of our great citiey is often in the hands of the evil element. There will be plenty of work for you to do, young men."

At this morning's session, Prof. Drummond gave an exceedingly interesting account of the great religious wave that had swept through Edinburgh and other British Universities during the past three years. It had its origin in the visit of two Cambridge students and noted athletes, C. F. Studd and Stanley Smith, to Edinburgh just before leaving for China as missionaries. They had a meeting with the Edinburgh athletes, and the meeting was so blessed by God that the Edinburgh students decided to continue the work. The result has been that among the 4,000 students of Edinburgh hundreds have been led to accept Christ. They soon began to send out deputations to other colleges so that the work has spread all over the British Isles. In the holidays hundreds of these students are engaged in holding evangelistic services for young men in various towns and cities throughout the country. They have also started religious work in the hospitals, and a number of them have taken a house in one of the lowest districts of Edinburgh, and thus live and work among the lowest of the low. There is no organization in all this work, which is conducted by a secret committee. They have not allowed anything to be published concerning the work, for fear of lessening the continued blessing of the work. It may interest your readers to know that Prof. Drummond will endeavor to extend this remarkable work to the Canadian colleges, and will be accompanied for the purpose by two other Edinburgh professors, one of them the nephew and successor of Prof. Wilson, the discoverer of chloroform. You will, doubtless, therefore, hear more about them.

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave; and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind

Dominion Finances.

OTTAWA, July 8.—The Deputy Minister of Finance has been busy at his books during the past few days, and the following is his statement of the financial affairs of the country on the 30th of June:—The gross debt of the Dominion at that date was $270,-200,374. The assets, consisting of investments, provincial accounts, bank accounts, etc., were $45,173,611, making the net debt $225,026,762. The decrease in the net debt in June over the preceeding month was $450,184. The revenue for the month of June was $2,698,069; for the fiscal year up to 31st May was $31,132,088, or a total for the year of $33,830,148 The expenditure in June was $2,107,350, and in the previous eleven months $29,266,363, or a total of $31,373,713. The expenditure on captial account for the yea was $5,411,045.

Lord Aberdeen in St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 8.—Two hundred Irish American and other citizens of St. Paul last night sat down to a banquet tendered to the Earl of Aberdeen, late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. In the address of welcome Bishop Ireland described the guest of the evening as the first Englishman who had ruled Ireland for the Irish, and declared that the name of Gladstone will take its place with those of O'Connell and Parnell. The Earl, in reply, declared that such a demonstration had a peculiar significance at the present juncture in promoting the success of the cause of Home Rule. "We must recognize the fact that a speedy passage of the Home Rule Bill depends on the votes of the British electors. I do not speak of whether Home Rule is coming, but it will be when the British public is disabused of its misapprehensions of the aspirations of the advocates of Home Rule."

Golden Medical Discovery.

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating, and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. It promptly cures the severest Coughs.

For Torpid Liver, Biliousness, or "Liver Complaint," Dyspepsia, and Indigestion, it is an unequalled remedy. Sold by druggists.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

"Well," said John, "at any rate that does not look like foul play unless, indeed, he has gone on to prepare a warm reception for us."

Jess shrugged her shoulders; she could not make it out; and then they settled themselves down to their long and lonely drive. They had forty odd miles to cover, but the guides, or rather the guard, would only consent to their outspanning once, which they did on the open veldt a little before sunset. At sundown they inspanned again and started across the darkening veldt. The road was in a shocking state, and until the moon got up, which it did about 9 o'clock, the journey was both difficult and dangerous. After that things were a little better; and at last, about 11 o'clock, they got into Heidelberg. The town seemed almost deserted. Evidently the great body of the Boers were at the front and had only left a guard at their seat of government.

"Where are we to outspan?" asked John of the Unicorn, who was jogging on alongside, apparently half asleep.

"At the hotel," was the short reply, and thither they went, and thankful enough they were to get there, and to find, from the lights in the windows, that the people were still up.

Standing at the inn door, holding a light above her head, they found a pleasant looking Englishwoman, who welcomed them heartily.

"Frank Muller was here three hours ago and told me to expect you," she said; "and very glad I am to see an English face again, I can tell you. My name is Gooch. Tell me, is my husband all right in Pretoria? He went up there with his wagon just before the siege began, and I have not heard a word from him since."

"Yes," said John, "he is all right. He was slightly wounded in the shoulder a month ago, but he is quite recovered."

"Oh, thank God!" said the poor woman, beginning to cry; "those devils told me that he was dead—to torment me, I suppose. Come in, miss; there is some hot supper ready when you have washed your hands. The boys will see to the horses."

Accordingly they entered, and were made as happy as a good supper, a hearty welcome and comfortable beds could make people in their condition.

In the early morning one of their estimable escort sent in a message to say that they were not to start before 10:30, as their horses required more rest, so they got several hours more in bed than they had expected, and anybody who has ever made a journey in a post cart in South Africa can understand what a blessing that was. At 9 they had breakfast, and as the clock struck 10:30 Mouti brought the cart round, and with it came the two Boers.

"Well, Mrs. Gooch," said John, "what do we owe you?"

"Nothing, Capt. Niel, nothing. If you only knew what a weight you have taken off my mind! Besides, we are quite ruined; the Boers have taken all my husband's cattle and horses, and until last week six of them were quartered on me without paying a farthing, so it makes no odds to me."

"Never mind, Mrs. Gooch," said John, cheerfully, "the government will compensate you when this business is over, no doubt."

Mrs. Gooch shook her head prophetically. "Never a farthing do I expect to see," she said. "If only I can get my husband back, and we can escape out of this wicked place with our lives, I shall be thankful. And look here, Capt. Niel, I have put up a basket full of food—bread, meat and hard boiled eggs and a bottle of three star brandy. They may be useful to you and the young lady before you get home. I don't know where you will sleep to-night, for the English are still holding Standerton, so you won't be able to stop there, and you can't get right through. No, don't thank me, I could not do less. Good by—good by, miss; I hope you will get through all right. You had better look out, though. Those two men you have got with you are a very bad lot. I heard say that that fat faced man with the tooth shot two wounded men through the head after the fight at Bronker's Spruit, and I know no good of the other. They were laughing and talking together about you in the kitchen this morning; one of my boys overheard them, and the man with the long hair said that, at any rate, they would not be troubled with you after to-night. I don't know what he meant; perhaps they are going to change the escort; but I thought that I had better tell you."

John looked grave, and his suspicions rearose, but at that moment one of the men in question rode up and told him that he must start at once, and so off they went.

The second day's journey was in many respects a counterpart of the first. The road was utterly deserted, and they saw neither Boer, Englishman nor Kaffir upon it; nothing, indeed, except a few herds of game grazing on the ridges.

Nothing further occurred till, by the orders of their escort, they outspanned, an hour or so before sunset, at a spot in the veldt where a faint track forked out of the Standerton road.

CHAPTER XXIII.

IN THE DRIFT OF THE VAAL.

The day had been intensely and overpoweringly hot, and our travelers sat in the shade of the cart positively gasping. During the afternoon there had been a little breeze, but this had now died away, and the stifling air felt as thick as though they were breathing cream. Even the two Boers seemed to feel the heat, for they were both outstretched on the grass a few paces to the left, to all appearances fast asleep. As for the horses, they were thoroughly done up—too much so to eat—and hobbled along as well as their knee halters would allow, daintily picking a mouthful here and a mouthful there. The only person who did not seem to mind was the Zulu Mouti, who sat on an anthcap near the horses, in the full glare of the setting sun and comfortably droned out a little song of his own invention, for Zulus are as great for improvising as the Italians.

"John," said Jess, at last, "where do you suppose we are going to camp to-night? If we follow the main road we shall reach Standerton in an hour."

"I don't suppose that they will go near Standerton," he said. "I suppose that we shall cross the Vaal by another drift and have to 'veldt' it."

Just then the two Boers woke up and began to talk earnestly together, as though they were debating something hotly.

Slowly the huge red ball of the sun sank toward the horizon, steeping the earth and sky in blood. About a hundred yards from where they sat the little bridle path that branched from the main road crossed the crest of one of the great land waves that rolled away in every direction toward the far horizon. John watched the sun sinking behind it till something called away his attention for a minute. When he looked up again there was a figure on horseback, standing quite still, upon the crest of the ridge in the full glow of the now disappearing sun. It was Frank Muller. John recognized him in a moment. His horse was standing sideways, so that even at that distance every line of his features, even the trigger guard of the rifle that rested on his knee, showed distinctly against the background of smoky red. Nor was that all. Both he and his horse had the appearance of being absolutely on fire. The effect produced was so weird and extraordinary that John called his companion's attention to it. She looked and shuddered involuntarily.

"He looks like a devil in hell," she said; "the fire seems to be running all up and down him."

"Well," said John, "he certainly is a devil, but I am sorry to say that he has not yet reached his destination. Here he comes, like a whirlwind."

In another twenty seconds Muller had reined the great black horse on to his haunches alongside of them, and was smiling sweetly and taking off his hat.

"You see I have managed to keep my word," he said. "I can tell you that I had great difficulty in doing so; indeed, I was nearly obliged to give the thing up at the last moment. However, here I am."

"Where are we to outspan to-night?" asked Jess. "At Standerton?"

"No," he said; "I am afraid that is more than I can manage for you, unless you can persuade the English officer there to surrender. What I have arranged is, that we should cross the Vaal at a drift I know about two hours (twelve miles) from here, and outspan at a farm on the other side. Do not trouble, I assure you you shall both sleep well to-night," and he smiled a somewhat terrifying smile. Jess thought.

[To be continued.]

A Very Thoughtful Act.

Two gentlemen were dining at a high priced restaurant and each had before him a porterhouse steak, a loaf of bread, potatoes galore and a side dish of some sort. Each had ordered the same dishes, and the bill, exclusive of a small bottle of wine, was over $3. One of the parties is a well known attorney, and the other is well known on St. Anthony Hill. Said the attorney: "There's enough food here for half a dozen persons; suppose we dine off the same dishes and give the balance to some poor chap who hasn't had a square meal to-day. Though not in accordance with the rules of the house, we'll take what we cannot eat away with us."

His companion willingly acquiesced, and after dinner they placed the remainder of their victuals in a newspaper, and, after paying their bill, walked out. They met a little newsboy, who begged them to purchase an evening paper. He had six left and was "stuck," and it was so late he couldn't sell them. The attorney's companion purchased all the papers, adding an extra dime, and the astonished little chap, with a dumb show of thanks, grabbed the package of food that was given him and dashed up the street. "Eat it yourself," said one of the gentlemen, before the lad ran away. "Oh, no!" was the reply, "I'll take it to mother." It's dollars to a pair of old boots that the boy was honest, and that he will be a good citizen some day.—Pioneer Press "Listener."

Dying to Slow Music.

Why is it that death scenes are so artificially managed on the stage nowadays, particularly when is taken into consideration the reason that actors and actresses endeavor to throw into their performances? A noted actress is playing Meg Merrilies at the opera house. In the last act the witch is shot and dies to slow music. A group of personages stand near her in a picturesque tableau, but no one offers to stanuch the wound, no one tenders a stimulant; they simply stand in striking poses and watch her die. In real life some one would have sent for a doctor, a comfortable resting place would have been made for the sufferer, and an effort would have been made to ease the last moments of the dying one.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Wharves of Savannah.

Savannah is indeed a port—a great port, our port, and is the receiving and distributing point for the produce and merchandise for a vast area of territory. From these wharves we took a circuit around and among the truck farms that seemed to have no limit, and just as far as the eye could reach there were gardens—vegetable gardens—thousands of acres in cabbages and potatoes and peas and beans and beets and onions and all the garden vegetables. Some of them gave signs of frost, but not many. Scores of negroes, large and small, were picking the peas, and they are boxed rapidly and hurried to the steamships for exportation. It is lively times in these truck farms now, and it is said to be a very profitable business.—Bill Arp in Atlanta Constitution.

England's Woman Cab Driver.

The only woman cab driver in England has just died. Visitors to Epping Forest will recall, as one of the peculiar institutions of that vicinity, the female jehu, who for many years wore conspicuously the badge of a driver, and held the reins in skillful competition with the men, who, no doubt, vociferously denounced at cab stands and railway stations this demonstration of a woman's rights.—London Letter.

Superiority of the Cowboy's Method.

The riding in the Wild West show has impressed several Englishmen by its grace and ease, due to the straight legs which the Americans carry, instead of the shortened stirrups and wellbent knees of English horsemen. Letters are printed in The Times proclaiming the superiority of the American fashion over the English method of "riding with the knees in the mouth." It would be hard on American dudes if the English fashion should change just after they have painfully acquired it.—Boston Transcript.

She Was Surprised.

Husband (reading)—Here is a very interesting article from Japan, on the mikado.

Wife—Dear me! has the "Mikado" craze really penetrated to Japan? It's quite astonishing!—Puck.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Baseball.

A baseball match between Peterborough and Belleville, at Peterborough, is on the programme for July 15th.

Hot Dinner.

The members of the Mark Street Methodist Church, Ashburnham, will serve hot dinner in the drill shed, from 10 o'clock and during the remainder of the day on the 12th, for 25 cents. 1d8

LADIES' low shoes in the most beautiful style at KIDD'S.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Erastus Wiman.

This prominent advocate of Commercial Union will not likely visit our town, but it is a very sure thing that Rowse's Satin Mervilleaux at 65c is as good as other houses sell at $1. Go and see them.

FOR harvest mitts at bed-rock prices, call at TURNBULL'S.

Building.

A block of stores is in course of erection on Simcoe street. The block will be built of red brick, will be three stories high, and will contain five well laid out stores. The block will cost about $10,000. Mr. T. Rutherford is the contractor, and Mr. Wm. Snowden, the builder.

Taken to Lindsay.

Frank Kearns, who was arrested for horse stealing on Saturday, was taken to Lindsay on the evening train by Chief Constable Bell. The name in the information read Frank Kearns alias Macdonald, and he also gave his name as O'Donnell, but his name is believed to be Kearns.

The Listeman-Kellogg Concert.

The reserved seats for the Listeman-Kellogg concert are going fast. One thing that is making this concert so popular is the fact that it is being held under capable auspices. The members of the Lansdowne Rowing Club are determined to make this the greatest success of the season. They are to be congratulated on their enterprise in bringing such a renowned company here. 1d8

Changed Parsonages.

The Rev. I. Tovell and the Rev. F. H. Wallace have changed residences. The Rev. I. Tovell as pastor of the Charlotte Street Church occupies the Reid Street parsonage, and the Rev. F. H. Wallace, as the George Street Church pastor, occupies the McDonell Street parsonage. The trustees of the latter church have had the parsonage repaired and repainted. The Rev. Mr. Wallace and family have been staying at Mr. Dumble's while the repairs were being made.

Presentation.

Before leaving town for Toronto, Mr. J. C. T. Lacey, who was for a number of years Superintendent of the Baptist Sunday School, was presented by the officers, teachers and children of the school with a large Bible and a History of the Baptists, a large new publication. The presentation was made by the Rev. Mr. McKay, on behalf of the school, and Mr. Lacey made a suitable reply. Mr. Duff has been chosen to succeed Mr. Lacey as Superintendent.

The Listemann-Kellogg Concert.

The Winnipeg Saturday papers devote from a half to three quarters of a column to reporting the Listemann-Kellogg Concert. The Free Press says:—"There was reason for the delight and enthusiasm manifested, for never before was Winnipeg favoured by a visit from such a violinist as Bernhard Listemann and rarely have her people heard such charming music as that of Miss Kellogg and those who so ably assisted her." The morning Call goes in ecstasies over Miss Kellogg. It says: "The appearance of Miss Fanny Kellogg on the stage was the signal for an outburst of applause. Miss Kellogg is too well known to the musical world to need commendation. Her voice betokens perfect cultivation. It is delightfully clear and sweet and her extraordinary executive skill asserts her to be an artiste of first rank. The enthusiasm of the audience rewarded the beautiful songstress," etc. etc.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

CHARACTER BUILDING.

A SERMON TO ORANGEMEN BY THE REV. I. TOVELL.

Some Mistakes in the Building of Character—One Thing People Take into Eternity that they did not Bring into Time.

On Sunday evening the Orangemen and True Blues of Peterborough District marched in procession to St. Paul's Church, where a special sermon was preached by the Rev. I. Tovell. The procession was formed at the Orange hall shortly before 7 o'clock. It was headed by the Fire Brigade Band, and consisted of the members of the Nassau Orange Lodge, the two town Orange Lodges and McWilliams Lodge of True Blues. There was a fair turn out and the procession was a fine one.

In the church the front seats in the centre were reserved for the members of the Order. There was a very large congregation present, the spacious edifice being filled to overflowing.

The Rev. I. TOVELL took for his text the 20th and 21st verses of Jude:—"But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." His theme, he said, was character building—making themselves what they were. What people thought they were was reputation, with which they had nothing to do, and over which they had very little control. Character was of vital importance. Every man was a character builder. God was the great Builder, and under Him every sincere person was a builder in the most holy faith. Every man was building either a good or a bad character. The Scriptures described the elements of a good character as faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity; and if these were in them and abounded they would be neither barren nor unfruitful. Every person was by the force of his own will moulding a character. It was a progressive work and was never completed while they were alive. He knew of no degree of perfection beyond which they could not go, for every day brought new opportunities of development. Progress was the language of Scripture. They ideal of a perfect manhood changed, and what they at one time considered the ideal was seen to be imperfect as they approached it. When a character was perfected it would be pure, rounded, symmetrical, solid. He wished to point out some mistakes that were made in character building. One was in choosing or laying down a false foundation on which to build. There were sandy places—places so uncertain that as certain as they build upon them the structure would come down. Other foundation could no man lay than that which was laid, Christ Jesus. No tradition or history was sufficient to build character upon, for there was only one thing sufficient, the Eternal Son of God. If he had hope, it was not because he had been born a Protestant or taught the Methodist religion, for their hope was in building on a living person, Jesus Christ. Faith in Jesus dying for their sins gave them hope. Another mistake was sometimes made in the material used for the superstructure. Having taken Christ for their Saviour their work was only commenced. Man had three great parts—the spiritual, physical and intellectual. His physical development was dependent upon his surroundings and upon what he took in, and it was the same with his moral and spiritual growth. If a man was filled with noble thoughts and lived in the sunlight of God he would form a noble type of Christian character. They were surrounded with costly and durable material for building, which they only needed a purpose to secure, for wealth was not necessary. Would they take that, or would they use the rotten timber and material? Out of the 580 poets they should choose the Christian poets, and of the 1,300 historians and authors they should choose the best. There were some persons who could only sit down with Tyndall, a brilliant mind but clouded with doubt, while there were other authors who had gone through the same fields and come out with faith in God. The rotten beam of atheism, the weak planks of Ingorsollism, the rusted nails of Paine and the worthless mortar of self-righteousness they should reject, and they should not paint their character with fashion's hand. They should weave the Bible into their natures. Sometimes people paid too much attention to the scaffolding that surrounded the building and not enough to the temple itself. They should not care so much for their surroundings, circumstances or position in society, for these were but temporal. Their whole thought should be given to that which was of supreme importance, and then when the angel of death took down the scaffolding they would have something to depend upon. They would go into eternity with one thing which they did not bring with them into time, and that was character. They could not leave that behind, the grave could not hold it; it must go up to stand the test. How important then that they should give attention to it. When they heard of the Cologne cathedral, St. Peter's at Rome, Westminster Abbey and other beautiful edifices, they came back to the thought that an honest man was the noblest work of God, and that nothing could equal a well developed character and a Christ-like mind. Character was the axle on which the world turned; it was the pivot of destiny. Addressing the members of the Society, he said that on Tuesday they would gather in great numbers and the hospitality of the town would be extended to the visitors. There were reasons why their Society deserved respect and consideration. He wanted to say to the Orangemen of Peterborough, let next Tuesday, on the part of every Lodge contained within this district, be the most memorable in its history. He asked them to keep in view the thought which he had presented to them this evening. Let it be said that the True Blues never acted a manlier part, and he trusted to those older in years to set a bright example.

A collection was taken up for the benefit of the Protestant Home, and at the conclusion of the service the Orangemen and True Blues marched back to the hall.

Personal.

Among the prominent visitors coming in August we note Mr. Henry Robertson, Barrister, Collingwood, has secured rooms at the Oriental Hotel. Many of our citizens will remember that Mr. Robertson was the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge and was present in his official capacity when Otonabee Lodge was resuscitated here in 1882. Mr. Robertson is the present Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Canada.

Mr. J. J. Wright, B. A., preached in the Presbyterian Church, Omemee, on Sunday, and at the other of the Rev. J. Ewing's appointments.

Judge Weller went to Sturgeon Point on Saturday evening, where he will spend some holidays.

The Rev. E. F. Torrance, M.A., of St Paul's Church, occupied the pulpit in the George Street Methodist Church on Sunday evening.

The Rev. N. R. Willoughby, M.A., of Port Perry, formerly pastor of the George Street Church, was in town on Friday and Saturday.

Our Bridge Works.

The contract has been awarded Mr. W. H. Law for an iron bridge of 180 feet span and 16 feet roadway, over the Thames River, in London Township, County of Middlesex. Under the wise system adopted by the people of Canada of encouraging home industries our town is obtaining a good share of the profits that some people are so anxious to bestow upon their friends in the United States.

Great Excitement.

Hundreds shot into that Cheap Cash Store on George street known as Rowse's Trade Palace, and bought $1 silks for 65c. Dress goods at half price and $3 parasols for $1.50 Their cheap goods astonish everybody.

The Ennismore Picnic.

The indications are that the Ennismore picnic in September will be a great success. A thousand tickets for the disposal of articles have been sold so rapidly that another thousand have been ordered.

During July and August, you can buy goods at very low prices at Rowse's Trade Palace. Almost every article is being sold at sweeping reductions in price.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

THE M'GLYNN CASE.

The Church Dignataries in New York Silent Regarding It.

NEW YORK, July 11.—At St. Patrick's Cathedral to-day no one would say anything regarding the case of Dr. McGlynn. Mgr. Preston refused to talk. He said he could not conceive how Dr. McGlynn could have taken communion yesterday unless it was administered by a young priest who did not know him. Dr. McGlynn's followers appear to be as earnest as ever. Dr. Carey, the leader of the anti-McGlynn Catholics, says the excommunicated priest will yet be restored. He says Rome has acted in ignorance. The summons to Rome by its conditions was virtually an order to stay away.

MONDAY, July 11.—Five owners of cows were charged with having cattle running at large. The cows had got out of the pasturage during the night, were impounded and the poundage paid. The cases were dismissed.

ASSAULT.

Wm. Powers was charged with having assaulted Cornelius Ryan on July 9th There was a dispute about some manure, which led to high words and a stick being thrown, without, however, doing much injury. A fine of $2 and costs was imposed.

THREATENING.

TUESDAY, July 12.—Robt. N. Boddy was charged by G. Brownlee with threatening. The defendant was remanded to gaol for a week.

INSULTING LANGUAGE.

T. Saunders and J. Heffernan were charged by J. Carr, of the locks, with having used insulting and indecent language toward him. Mr. C. W. Sawers appeared for the defence. The defendants were discharged with the admonition not to do it again.

DISORDERLY.

J. Clark and J. Ryan, two navvies from Burleigh, got three days each for having acted in a disorderly manner on the street on Monday evening.

The Alcazar Catastrophe.

CHICAGO, July 11.—The Times special from Ironwood, Mich., across the river from Hurley, Wis., says, seventeen people lost their lives in the Alcazar theatre. It is probable that John Jarrett, the stage carpenter, will die from his injuries. Jennie Sheridan, an actress who leaped from the third story, is also severely hurt. She says that she tried to persuade several others to jump, but they delayed and the floor fell in taking them with it.

The Scott Act.

KINGSTON, July 11.—The license commissioners in Frontenac, Lennox and Addington have been notified to institute suits against the county councils for their proportions of the expenses estimated as necessary to enforce the Scott Act. The Ontario Government appropriates $35,000 to pay its share of carrying out the law.

Reform Ex-Leaders.

TORONTO, July 11.—The Hon. Edward Blake has been sojourning at Lake Simcoe, and with improved health will go soon for a prolonged visit to the Lower St. Lawrence. The Hon. A. Mackenzie will soon visit Banff Springs in the Rocky Mountains.

GENUINE French goat boots for ladies' at KIDD'S for $1.75 per pair.

A THREATENING OUTLOOK.

Ominous Clouds in the Horizon of Many European States.

LONDON, July 11.—A singular proof of the complexity of European and Asiatic politics is afforded by the entanglement to which the Bulgarian election has given rise. While the Sobranje was actually engaged in the work of selecting a sovereign, no one paid much attention to it, but the culmination of its labors has been the signal for the appearance of ominous clouds in the horizons of many and widely separated States. Sir Henry Wolff, who has been conducting the negotiations with Turkey in regard to the settlement of the Egyptian question has been instructed to remain at Constantinople for the present instead of returning to London, as had been intended. The real reason for prolonging his stay is not that the Egyptian question may be brought any nearer settlement thereby, as it is pretty well ascertained by this time that the negotiations have hopelessly fallen through. His presence at the Turkish capital is needed on account of the sudden reopening of the Bulgarian question and the possible trouble that may ensue between Russia, Turkey and Austria on that account. Herr Von Radowitz, the German ambassador at Constantinople, has also received instructions to postpone his departure for a week. In both cases these orders of detention were given at the special request of the Sultan, who is evidently much alarmed at the outlook in eastern affairs, and wishes to have the trusted representatives of the two leading western powers at hand for advice and consultation in case of trouble. Telegrams from the various European capitals indicate that the probability of Prince Ferdinand accepting the throne to which he has been called are hourly growing less. Russia is firm in her refusal to accept the Bulgarian ruler elected by the Sobranje.

THE LAND BILL.

The Second Reading Moved—Restricting Evictions—Land Purchase Facilitated.

LONDON, July 11.—Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in moving the second reading of the Land Bill, said that the Government did not offer the measure as proposing any definite settlement of the land question. It was merely an amendatory bill, one tryihg to remedy the injustices which experience had shown arose under the Acts of Parliament of 1870 and 1871. It brought the lease holders under the Acts of 1881, thus completing the work of Mr. Gladstone. The proposed new clauses, which deal with purchase of land, are in accordance with the clauses of the Land Act suggested by Mr. John Bright in 1870. In regard to evictions, Mr. Balfour explained it was proposed to substitute a written notice for a writ of execution and ejectment, and to allow the tenant, by means of the Bankruptcy Act, to obtain a stay of proceedings, while, at the same time, spreading the liability of the tenant over an indefinite period. Strong objection, he supposed, awaited the bankruptcy clause, but in no civilized country could the debtor escape his liability by any other process than the payment of his debt. The bill would certainly stop harsh evictions in the future. By this pending measure the Government are aiming at something like a final settlement. They would deal out the widest application of the purchase clauses of the bill, and the clauses relating to the revision of judicial rents. The Parnellites might regard the bill with contempt; regard it as the smallest instalment of their demands, but if it did nothing more it would enable Parliament to tide over several economic difficulties. A still greater measure would be introduced. (Cheers.)

Mr. Bannerman (Liberal) moved that the bill be rejected, as it did not include any means of revision of judicial rents.

An Old Proverb.

MONTREAL, July 11.—The Witness says:—The President of one of the local banks states that he will deduct from future dividend the amount of the Provincial Government tax just sanctioned by the Privy Council. Several other bankers when interviewed on the subject were unable to state, as yet, what particular action will be taken in the matter. One of them said that the whole would depend upon the operation of the year, but that—a large amount having to be paid at first, in the shape of arrears and interest for five years—it was quite possible that the bank would be obliged to take part of the tax from the dividend direct.

"Mr. Mercier," said the same gentleman, "promised to abolish this tax; but you know the proverb:

"When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
When the devil got well, the devil a monk was he!"

A Mystery.

QUEBEC, July 9.—The body of a small but fine-looking young woman, with long, fair hair, and apparently, about 20 years of age, was found floating with the rising tide of Indian Cove this morning. It had evidently not been long in the water, as no signs of decomposition were yet apparent, but thus far no one here has been able to identify it. It was clothed in navy blue flannel dress, handsomely trimmed with velvet, and the underclothing was also of good quality. No money or other valuables were found in the pockets, but a reticule was picked up near the body, containing a pair of black kid gloves, a few unmarked handkerchiefs and three keys. It is thought by some that she was a passenger on board the steamer and accidentally fell overboard on the way inward or outward.

Montana Horses for Britain.

MONTREAL, July 11.—The Donaldson Line SS. Cynthia, for Glasgow, on the 20th inst., will take a shipment of 45 thoroughbred Montana horses, now at Mr. Kimball's stables. They are in first class condition, despite having been driven 400 miles across the prairies, and spending 17 days on the track. They are shipped as an experiment by Mr. Peter Wylie, of Custer County, Montana. Should it prove a success a big trade will be opened up with the Old Country.

ENGLAND

LORD BUTE anticipate spending another £50,000 on Cardiff Castle. The work will occupy 200 workmen about four years.

MR. GLADSTONE was born in England (Liverpool), but his parentage was Scotch, so he may quite correctly, if he choose, call himself a Scotchman.

A TRAVELLING-BAG, containing jewellery valued at £6,500, has been stolen from the Midland Hotel, Euston Road, London. Other jewel robberies of the kind have been reported recently in London.

A FIRE on the 22nd June on the Glyndyrdwy mountain, in the Vale of Llangollen, spread with remarkable rapidity, and hundreds of acres of heather on the slopes were enveloped by the flames.

Dr. Stubbs, Bishop of Chester, consecrated on the 18th June the New Church of St. Mary's, Chester, which, with the exception of some local gifts, has been built and furnished at the expense of the Duke of Westminster.

Mr. Justice Stirling has refused to restrain the Hop Bitters Company from spending £1,000 on a challenge cup for the National Rifle Association, on the ground that the gift was an advertisement, and within the powers of the directors to give.

Miss Ramsay, daughter of Sir James Ramsay of Bamff, and a student of Girton College, on the 18th June., passed in Class 1, Division 1, of the Cambridge Classical Tripos. She may thus be said to be senior classic, there being no males in that class.

The real throne of Great Britain is the chair that stands on a slightly raised dais at the south end of the House of Lords, in Westminister Palace. It is an exact copy of the coronation chair, save that it is larger and has an iron instead of a wooden framework.

The 18th June, being the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, which was fought on June 18th, 1815, the usual custom of decking the colours with laurel was observed in those regiments of the British army which took part in the memorable engagement.

60,000 buns, 30,000 meat pies, 30,000 cakes, 30,000 oranges, and 9,000 gallons of lemonade and ginger ale, were provided for the children's Jubilee fete in Hyde Park. It is estimated that if the meat pies, buns, cakes and oranges had been placed in line they would extend to no less a distance than 9½ miles.

IRELAND.

There was no criminal business for disposal at the Quarter Sessions for the East Riding of County Cork on the 14th of June.

The members of Parliament from Cork have called a convention of the Irish National League tameet in Cork on the 17th July, to devise means to enable tenants to resist eviction.

A Parliamentary return shows that in the quarter ended 31st March 5,042 persons were evicted in Ireland for non-payment of rent, of whom 223 were re-admitted as tenants, and 3,328 as caretakers.

The tenants of Colonel Nolan, M. P., at Carna, having adopted the "Plan of Campaign," fifty of them are reported to be under notice of eviction, and it is said the Sheriff is to be accompanied by a force of 300 police.

While the children of the Belfast Deaf and Dumb Institute were celebrating the Jubilee by a trip to the Black Mountains, two deaf mutes named Stewart fell over a dangerous declivity and sustained terrible injuries. The younger lad is not expected to recover.

An official return of the number of Irish agrarian outrages reported during April and May, shows that during April there were 86 and during May 62. There were in April one case of murder, one of manslaughter, and one of firing at the person, but no such offences were reported in May. Nine incendiary fires were reported in each of the months.

A madman on July 9th attacked a party of men making hay in a field near Rathfreeland, County Down. The lunatic was armed with a bill-hook, and he killed four men and wounded two. He then fled, and when captured was standing up to his chin in the water of a neighbouring lake.

On June 17th, a lad named Patrick Hawkins, aged 16 years, while engaged in scutching tow in Mr. McCartin's water mill, Backaderry, Castlewellan, was caught by the scutching handles of the machinery, and before any assistance could avail his arm was dreadfully lacerated, being almost wrenched from his body. Dr. Gray, on inspection, ordered his removal to Downpatrick Infirmary to have the arm amputated.

In Maghera, County Londonderry, a farm laborer named Charles Mullan, after setting fire to his own house and that of his neighbor, named Hassan, proceeded to dispose of himself in a shocking manner. After taking a small quantity of arsenic, and finding that it operated too slowly, he gashed himself with a reaping-hook in a fearful manner, concluding by thrusting a pair of scissors into his abdomen. He died in agony in the workhouse, where he was taken.

THE RANCHING INDUSTRY.

Favourable Showing of the Annual Round-Up—Winter Losses Small.

WINNIPEG, July 10.—Senator Cochrane, of the celebrated Cochrane Ranch Company, has arrived in this city on his return from the West, where he attended the annual round up. Based upon the closest possible scrutiny, Senator Cochrane was able to state that the entire losses during the past winter would not exceed seven or eight per cent. On his own ranch, which contains ten thousand cattle, the loss was not over two or three per cent. In individual cases, where ranches had just been established, the loss might amount to twenty per cent., but this was no criterion, as the animals were what is known as "pilgrim cattle," and not being acclimatized it was not to be expected that they would stand the weather as well as animals used to it. The past season, said Mr. Cochrane, was the best they experienced since the establishment of the ranche six years ago. The loss of sheep on the British American ranche, in which he is also interested, was not more than four per cent. He speaks strongly in favour of settlers coming to Manitoba and not going further west. He says there is no finer country under the sun than Manitoba.—Mail.

LATEST CABLE NEWS!

RESISTING EVICTIONS.

DUBLIN, June 10.—In the evictions at Coolgraney, County of Wexford, yesterday, a man named Darcey and his daughters made such a stubborn defence of their house against the bailiffs who attempted to eject them, that the officers in their anger attacked the girls and badly injured one of them on the head. Three of the bailiffs will be arrested and charged with assault. In the next house a tenant and his wife made a considerable amount of resistance, but they were put out and then arrested for scalding the police with hot water.

BLOWN UP.

NEW YORK, July 11.—The Excelsior Fireworks Company's establishment on Park Place, near Broadway, has just been blown up.

A MARQUIS QUARRELS.

LONDON, July 11.—There was a bit of a sensation at Hyde Park on Saturday evening. At 7 o'clock a carriage containing a party of four, two ladies and two gentlemen, was slowly driving between the statue of Achilles and the Marble Arch when the Marquis de Leuville drove alongside and, flicking his whip across the face of one of the gentlemen, called him a swindler and a thief. The assaulted man, who made no response, was Prince Eristoff, a Russian. The ladies in the carriage were Mrs. Frank Leslie and a friend from New York. Whether the affair will lead to a hostile meeting remains to be seen. The Marquis de Leuville has spent some time in America and the report that Mrs. Leslie and he were engaged to be married was long a matter of gossip.

A DEMAND.

ROME, July 11.—The Moniteur denies that Monsignor Persico is the guest of Archbishop Walsh in Ireland.

THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.

LONDON, July 11, 4.30 p.m.—On the stock Exchange to-day, foreign securities are flat. Russians are especially affected, and have fallen two per cent. This is due to articles in the Berlin press disfavoring investment in Russian stocks. Other markets are flat in sympatny with foreign securities, and especially is this the case with home railways. Despatches from Berlin and Paris report weak markets there.

QUEBEC TAX CASES.

LONDON, July 11.—Judgment was formally given by the Privy Council Judicial Committee on Saturday, in the case of Bank of Toronto against Lambe, jointly with appeals by the Merchant's Bank, Canadian Bank of Commerce and North British and Merchantile Insurance Company, involving the Province of Quebec tax law. The appeal was dismissed in all cases, the judges holding that the tax appealed against is a direct tax and the provincial act by which the tax is imposed, valid. The appellants pay costs. The court deemed the point raised of some importance.

ENGLAND AND THE VATICAN.

LONDON, July 11.—It is reported that Monsignor Scilla informed the Pope that the time had not yet arrived to establish a nunciature, or apostolic delegation at London, although some official link between England and the Vatican seemed not only expedient but imperative.

THE COVENTRY ELECTION.

LONDON, July 11.—The votes cast at the election in Coventry on Saturday, to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of Col. Henry William Eaton, Conservative, to the peerage, were:—Ballantyne, Gladstonian, 4,229; Col. Eaton, 4,213.

THE WIMBLEDON TEAM.

LONDON, July 11.—The Canadian team has arrived at Wimbledon.

HARTINGTON TO GLADSTONE.

LONDON, July 11.—Lord Hartington replying to Mr. Gladstone's recent letter, says: "I do not think it necessaay to prolong a important correspondence. I did not think it necessary to specially exclude you from my statement that the Liberal dissension on the Irish question was only of recent date, which, certainly, was not intended as an unfriendly statement. I shall not, therefore, publish the letter marked private but I repeat that it cannot properly be described as a letter of the strongest remonstrance, and I have no objection to your publishing it if you think fit."

DROUGHT IN EUROPE.

LONDON, July 11.—The persistent drought all over Europe is beginning to be seriously felt. The damage done to crops everywhere is recounted in doleful terms, but the chief embarrassment is in the big cities like Paris and London, where the water supply is very tainted and scanty. There has been no rain here for over a months, and the skies and the barometer give no promise whatever of relief.

RUSSIA PREPARING.

LONDON, July 11.—All the men on furlough in South Russia have been ordered to rejoin their colours.

CANADA'S RESPONSIBILITY.

LONDON, July 11.—Sir Henry Holland, being questioned by the Opposition, said that a difficulty had arisen between the natives of Metlakahtla and the Government of British Columbia. These Indians had made overtures to the Government at Washington to settle them in Alaska, but the Dominion Government were advised that no encouragement was given them by the United States Government. The Dominion Government, said Sir Henry, were entirely responsible, and he would not be justified in pressing any particular policy.

MGR. PERSICO'S MOVEMENTS.

DUBLIN, July 11.—Mgr. Persico, the Pope's special envoy, visited many of the Dublin churches yesterday. He was recognized and conferred a blessing on the congregations. A delegation from a temperance society called at Archbishop Walsh's residence yesterday to obtain Mgr. Persico's blessing for the society. The envoy conferred it. Mgr. Persico intends to proceed to Coolgraney, County Wexford, to witness the evictions which are in progress there.

A WOMEN'S AGITATION.

DUBLIN, July 11.—A deputation of English ladies to-day presented an address to Mrs. Sullivan, wife of the Lord Mayor of Dublin, asking her to assist in an agitation for the repeal of the Coercion law.

TWO MEASURES.

In reference to Mayor Howland's assertion that Toronto "went back on its promise" in refusing to contribute $180,000 towards the works for the protection of the Island, the Globe says:—

"The Mayor should not be ever (over?) ready to make such a charge against the people of Toronto even if he knew it to be well founded."

Its love for its own city enables the Globe to perceive that it is not necessarily the duty of the friends and leading men of Toronto to volunteer disparaging assertions about it, but that if good cannot be said discreet silence may be proper. But the Globe does not apply the same rule in the case of its country. Any love it may have had for the Dominion seems to have been turned to hatred since the people of Canada have steadfastly rejected the Reformers and their policy. Or if any love remains it is apparently exceeded and overpowered by hatred of those whom the people have entrusted with the management of their affairs, and of the great majority of the people for so trusting them So the Globe, and leaders of its party, with its constant assistance and applause, far from observing a friendly silence where babbling may be injurious, adopt the opposite course of eagerly searching for and parading any trivial flaw, exaggerating every defect or mistake, and in despair at the lack of material for criticism, distorting the truth, or even by bold inventions disparaging Canada, its people and its chosen statesmen. Anything is raked up or manufactured that can injure Canada, so long as it will not take the Globe and its friends for its councillors and managers of its affairs.

To pervert the truth is neither moral nor expedient, but it is not therefore necessary to parade and exaggerate whatever may be used to the disadvantage of the community of which one forms part. The Globe recognizes this fact as regards Toronto, but it will not recognize it as regards Canada—so long as Canada remains Conservative.

It would be well if the Globe and its friends would learn a lesson from our neighbors. In the United States there was no show of sympathy with the great rebellion, outside the districts affected, and one does not hear even those politically opposed to the Government decrying the country and trying to persuade people to avoid it as inferior to competitors for settlers. Great as has been the unprecedented progress of our Dominion, it would be still more rapid if the Opposition in Canada were as patriotic as in the United States—if the Globe with its friends took the same view of its duty to the Dominion as it does of its duty to Toronto.

THE following definition is given to us by the Toronto Globe:—

"Unrestricted Reciprocity means to multiply the home market by thirteen."

So that is what it really means? Are California or New Mexico or Texas home markets for Canada? Or shall we find markets at all, home or otherwise, in Dakota and Minnesota for our wheat, in Chicago and Cincinnati for our hogs, in Florida for our fruit, in Michigan for our lumber, in Ohio for our coal, in New England for our textiles, and so on? And if the Globe's definition is correct, so must its converse be, that the producers to supply our markets and to compete with our people must also be multiplied by thirteen. Producers must seek a market where their products are in demand, not in localities where there is a still larger surplus of similar articles.

AFTER quoting some remarks from the REVIEW, and carefully avoiding the point at issue, the London Advertiser says:—

"Honest importers did not give fortunes to spies and informers. The money was filched from them under the iniquitous system which prevails."

Really the Advertiser's friends, if large sums of money were filched from them by spies and informers, must obviously have been among the dishonest not the honest importers. Honest dealers do not yield to blackmailers but resist them, while dishonest dealers may be an easy prey. We have no excuse to offer for blackmailers, even if they pillage the dishonest, and on the other hand the Advertiser should cease to sympathize with importers if they are victimized because they have tried to defraud their honest competitors and the whole people of Canada, even if the Dominion has chosen a Conservative administration.

SOUTH DOURO.

From our own Correspondent.

RETURNED HOME.—Mr. Martin McManus and Mr. Michael Tobin returned from Uncle Sam's territory on Thursday of last week. The former had been away on a prospecting tour and reports very favorably of the west and says it is the place for young men. The latter has been in Rochester celebrating the Fourth and visited Canadaguay and Fisher's Station. He says the city has improved wonderfully. He also visited the homestead of Colonel Leman, where he put in his boyhood days, and saw an oak stump, the tree of which he felled nearly half a century ago, and says that it is as sound as the bell on the Midland engine No. 6. The Colonel served in the revolutionary war and Mike served in the wars of Troy.

LAKEFIELD.

DIVISION COURT.—Judge Weller held a sitting of the Division Court on Thusday, of last week. Messrs. Dumble, Moore, Stratton and Dixon acted as counsel in the different actions. Six cases came before His Honor.

YOUNG FOLK'S PICNIC.—On Dominion Day a number of young men chartered the Cruiser for a trip to Bel's Creek. Each had got his best girl with him and the party was as jolly a crowd as ever left the village. They were disappointed however, in reaching their expected destination, for on arriving at Boschinck Narrows it was found to be blocked with logs. The party however made for Gilchrist Bay, where they took dinner after which a pleasant sail was made for White Lake where they spent several hours in fishing, boating, etc. The party returned about 8 o'clock in the evening having spent an enjoyable day.—Chronicle

PORT HOPE.

PERSONAL.—The Hon. and Right Reverend Adelbert Anson, D.D., Lord Bishop of Qu'Appelle, was in town on Thursday and spent the day at Trinity College School, the guest of the Head Master.

BROKE THE BONE.—Alf. Regan, a young base ball enthusiast of this town, went to Cobourg on Thursday to see the game. After the match he was throwing the ball, when he gave his arm a twitch that broke the bone. He had it set, and will not play ball for some time.

TORN BY A FOG SIGNAL.—Edward Welch, one of a tie gang working on the Grand Trunk at the station here, was severely injured on Thursday morning. He was helping some men move a car, when a fog signal, placed by some one on the track, exploded. Welch's left arm was torn to the bone from the wrist to the elbow.

BASEBALL.—The second ball match of the season between the Cobourg and Port Hope teams, was played Thursday afternoon at Cobourg. It resulted as did the first, in a victory for the Port Hopes. The Port Hopes did not win because they played good ball; they won because the Cobourgs played bad ball. The game was a carnival of errors. The errors were not in units but in duets and trios; they came in crowds. Of course there were some redeeming flashes. The batteries of both teams held their own, McNichull's pitching being rather more effective than Coyle's.—Times.

WIMAN'S PROMISES.

Mr. Wiman promised the shareholders of the Montreal Telegraph Company certain dividends, but he disappointed them. He is indeed a promising man. If he is really anxious to do Canadians a favor let him give us lower telegraphic rates. They are higher now than they were before he induced us to pool our telegraphic interests with his. A similar result on a larger scale would follow the pooling of our taxes with his.—Toronto World, (Indep),

WHO SHOULD CONTROL.

The License Coms. and Inspector of Frontenac asked the County Council for $861 for the enforcement of the Scott Act; and the Council passed a resolution ignoring the Board and its Inspector, and all responsibility where they have nothing to say in appointing these officials. No doubt the principal laid down by the Council is correct; if they have to assume the responsibility of imposing taxes, they should have control over those who spend the same.—Newmarket Era, (Reform).

OUR SURPLUS WHEAT.

Another city like Toronto in Ontario would about consume the surplus wheat product of Canada thus far.—Victoria Warder.

ICE CREAMS AND SODA WATER

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

"But how about this drift, sir, Numero?" said John. "Is it safe? I should have thought that the Vaal would have been in flood after all the rain that we have had."

"The drift is perfectly safe, Capt. Niel. I crossed it myself about two hours ago. I know you have had a bad opinion of me, but I suppose you do not think that I should guide you to an unsafe drift?" and with another bow he rode on to speak to the two Boers, saying, as he went, "Will you tell the Kaffir to put the horses in?"

With a shrug of his shoulders John rose and went off toward Mouti, to help him to drive up the four grays, who were now standing limply together, biting at the flies, that, before a storm, sting more sharply than at any other time. The two horses belonging to the escort were some fifty paces to the left. It was as though they appreciated the position of affairs, and declined to mix with the animals of the discredited Englishman.

The two Boers rose as Muller came and walked off toward their horses, Muller slowly following them. As they came the horses hobbled away another thirty yards or so, and then lifted up their heads, and, as a consequence, their fore legs, to which the heads were tied, and stood looking defiantly at their captors, for all the world as though they were trying to make up their minds whether or not to shake hands with them.

Frank Muller was alongside the two men now, and they were alongside the horses.

"Listen!" he said, sternly.

The men looked up.

"Go on loosening the reins, and listen."

They obeyed, and began to slowly fumble at the knee halters.

"You understand what our orders are. Repeat them—you!"

The man with the tooth, who was addressed, still handling the rein, began as follows: "To take the two prisoners to the Vaal, to force them into the water where there is no drift, at night, so that they drown; if they do not drown, to shoot them."

"Those are the orders," said the Vilderbeeste, grinning.

"You understand them?"

"We understand, meinheer; but, forgive us, the matter is a big one. You gave the orders—we wish to see the authority."

"Yah, yah," said the other, "show us the authority. These are two harmless people enough. Show us the authority for killing them. People must not be killed so, even if they are English folk, without proper authority, especially when one is a pretty girl who would do for a man's wife."

Frank Muller set his teeth. "Nice fellows you are to have under one!" he said. "I am your officer; what other authority do you want? But I thought of this. See here!" and he threw a paper from his pocket. "Here, you—read it! Careful now—do not let them see from the wagon."

The big, flabby faced man took the paper and, still bending down over the horse's knees, read aloud:

"The two prisoners and their servant (an Englishman, an English girl and a Zulu Kaffir) to be executed in pursuance of our decree, as your commanding officer shall order, as enemies of the republic. For so doing this shall be your warrant."

"You see the signature," said Muller, "and you do not dispute it?"

"Yah, we see it, and we do not dispute it."

"Good. Give me back the warrant."

The man with the tooth was about to do so, when his companion interposed.

"No," he said, "the warrant must remain with us. I do not like the job. If it were only the man and the Kaffir now—but the girl, the girl! If we give you back the warrant, what shall we have to show for the deed of blood? The warrant must remain with us."

"Yah, yah; he is right," said the Unicorn; "the warrant must remain with us. Put it in your pocket, Jan."

"Curse you, give it to me!" said Muller, between his teeth.

"No, Frank Muller, no," answered the Vilderbeeste, patting his pocket, while the two or three square inches of skin round his nose wrinkled up in a hairy grin that, owing to the cut on his head, was even more curious than usual; "if you wish to have the warrant you shall have it, but then we shall upsaddle and go, and you can do your murdering yourself. There, there, take your choice; we shall be glad enough to get home, for we do not like the job. If I go out shooting I like to shoot buck or Kaffir, not white people."

Frank Muller reflected a moment, and then he laughed a little. "You are funny people, you home bred Boers," he said; "but perhaps you are right. After all, what does it matter who has the warrant, provided the thing is well done? Mind there is no bungling, that is all."

"Yah, yah," said the fat faced man, "you can trust us for that. It won't be the first time that we have toppled over. If I have my warrant I ask nothing better than to go on shooting Englishmen all night, one down, the other come on. I know no prettier sight than an Englishman toppling over."

"Stop that talk and saddle up, the cart is waiting. You fools can never understand the difference between killing when it is necessary to kill and killing for killing's sake. These people must die because they have betrayed the land."

"Yah, yah," said the Vilderbeeste, "betrayed the land; we have heard that before. Those who betray the land must manure it; that is a good rule," and he laughed and passed on.

Frank Muller watched his retreating form with a smile of peculiar malignity on his handsome face. "Ah, my friend," he said to himself in Dutch, "you and that warrant will part company before you are many hours older. Why, it would be enough to hang me, even in this happy land of patriots. Old —— would not forgive even me for taking that little liberty with his name. Dear me, what a lot of trouble one has to take to be rid of a single enemy! Well, it must be done, and Bessie is well worth it; but if it had not been for this war I could never have managed it. Ah! I did well to give my voice for war. I am sorry for the girl Jess, but it must be; there must be no living witness left. Ah! we are going to have a storm. So much the better. Such deeds are best done in a storm."

Muller was right; the storm was coming up fast, throwing a vail of inky cloud across the star spangled sky. In South Africa there is but little twilight and the darkness follows hard upon the heels of the day. No sooner had the great angry ball of the sun finally disappeared than the night swept with her stars across the sky. And now after her came the great storm, covering up her beauty with his blackness. The air was stiflingly hot. Above was a starry space; to the east the angry bosom of the storm, in which the lightnings were already playing with an incessant flickering movement, and to the west a deep red glow, reflected from the sunken sun, yet lingered on the horizon.

On toiled the horses through the gathering gloom. Fortunately the road was fairly level and free from mudholes, and Frank Muller rode just ahead to show the way, his strong, manly form standing out clear against the departing western glow.

It was an awful night. Great pillars of mud colored sky came creeping across the surface of the veldt toward them, seemingly blown along without a wind. And now, too, a ghastly looking ringed moon arose and threw a weird, distorted light upon the blackness that seemed to shudder in her rays, as though with a prescience of the advancing terror. On crept the mud colored columns, and on above them, and resting on them, came the muttering storm. The cart was quite close to the river now, and they could plainly hear its murmur. To their left was a koppie, covered with white, slablike stones, on which the sickly moonbeams danced.

"Look, John, look!" cried Jess, with a hysterical laugh; "it looks like a huge graveyard, and the dark shadows between are the ghosts of the buried."

"Nonsense," said John, sternly; "what do you mean by talking such rubbish?"

He felt that she was a little off her balance, and, what is more, he was getting rather off his own, and therefore was naturally the angrier with her, and the more determined to be perfectly matter of fact.

Jess made no answer, but she was frightened, she could not tell why. The whole thing resembled some awful dream, or one of Doré's pictures come to life. No doubt, also, the near presence of the storm exercised an effect upon her nerves. Even the wearied horses snorted and shook themselves uneasily.

They crept over the ridge of a wave of land, and the wheels rolled softly on the grass.

"Why, we are off the road!" shouted John to Muller, who was still guiding them, fifteen or twenty paces ahead.

"All right! all right! it is a short cut to the ford!" he called in answer, and his voice rang strange and hollow through the great depths of the silence.

Below them, a hundred yards away, the light, such as it was, gleamed faintly upon the wide surface of the river. Another five minutes and they were on its shore, but in the gathering gloom they could not make out the opposite bank.

"Turn to the left!" shouted Muller; "the ford is a few yards up. It is too deep here for the horses."

John turned accordingly, and followed Muller's horse some 300 yards up the bank till they came to a spot where the water ran with an angry music, and there was a great swirl of eddies.

"Here is the place," said Muller; "you must make haste through. The house is just the other side, and it will be better to get there before the tempest breaks."

"It's all very well," said John, "but I can't see an inch before me; I don't know where to drive."

"Drive straight ahead; the water is not more than three feet deep, and there are no rocks."

"I am not going, and that is all about it."

"You must go, Capt. Niel. You cannot stop here, and if you can we cannot. Look there, man!" and he pointed to the east, which now presented a truly awful and magnificent sight.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

POLITICAL ABSORPTION.

"In short, whilst farmers are declaring for Commercial Union as being reciprocity as we had it before, the movement at the bottom means revolution, in the shape of the political absorption of Canada by the United States. The more the matter is discussed, the more clearly will this appear, and how many are there even among farmers who would buy the doubtful advantages (taking them from every point of view) of Commercial Union at such a price?"—Galt Reformer (Ref.)

THE KIND OF MAN.

A correspondent of the Duluth Herald writes to that paper as follows:—"Will you please inform Premier Norquay, of Manitoba, if he wants the service of ten thousand men to help build a railroad to the border despite the active opposition of the Dominion Government, he will find them in the North-West. Many of them can bring their own ammunition." That shows who the people are who really desire the construction of the Red River Valley railway. The thing is engineered by foreigners; and if the road is built foreign money will build it; this foreigner, who is a little more outspoken than the rest, proposes to build it under the protection of foreign bayonets.—Hamilton Spectator.

GOOD FOR THE UNITED STATES.

With the admission of Canadian ore free into Pennsylvania and Ohio, also of American pig and bars free into Canada, all inducements for the starting of furnaces and rolling mills here is at an end. For what need of putting up works in Canada, at a large cost, when already American works are in existence that can supply us all that Canada needs free of duty? Iron mining would of course go on here, but no iron-making; that would all belong to the other side.—Toronto World.

NO MORE SONS.

Another office to fill, in the gift of Premier Mowat—another shrievalty to give Him "cold sweats" through the importunity of applicants desiring to offer themselves on the altar of their suffering country.—Newmarket Era, (Reform).

NOT ALL BLINDED.

Not all the Liberal papers blindly follow the blind Globe into the ditch. The Berlin Telegraph, a staunch Grit, opposes commercial union as unfair to Britain, favorable to annexation, and dangerous to Canadian industries and institutions. Berlin has prospered greatly under the N. P., and so have the farmers of Waterloo County. But if any free trader still desires a change his honest and consistent course is to demand free trade with the whole world, without favoritism and without discrimination, least of all against the Empire.—Toronto World (Indep.)

FLOUR FOR ENGLAND.

In Manitoba, within the British Empire, is to be found some of the finest wheat in the world that can be bought at 16s. per qr. of 480 lbs., and under. Here is truly a superb margin for profit and a glorious chance for the formation of a syndicate strong enough to build elevators in Manitoba, and to stock them with choicest wheat of the region. Of course, even then it would be impossible to keep Minneapolis flour at all times out of the English market, but we might, by combining to obtain the best raw material, place ourselves in a position to manufacture goods that would compete on equal terms with the finest products of Minneapolis, and it is difficult to see how this end could be attained in any other way. —London (England) Miller.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of dietetic a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Lacrosse.

A lacrosse match is being played in the Riverside Park this afternoon, Norwood vs. Riversides.

Early Closing.

The grocers have come to an arrangement to close their places of business at 7 p.m., commencing this evening, until the fall.

LADIES' low shoes in the most beautiful style at KIDD'S.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttoned lengths, that J. J. Sheeby is selling for 45 cents.

Cricket.

A match is proceeding on the P. A. A. A. grounds between the East Toronto and Peterborough Cricket Clubs. The home eleven went first to the bat and at 2 o'clock had 190 runs for five wickets.

Fire Brigade Excursion.

The Annual Excursion of the Peterborough Fire Brigade will take place about the 1st of August. Grimsby Park is the place selected. Look out for further information in future locals. d9

Your Engagements.

Make no engagements for to-morrow evening, except it be to attend the grand Listemann-Kellogg concert. This will be the event of the season, beyond all doubt. There are a few good seats available, but those who wish to secure them should do so at once, as they will be all gone before to-morrow evening. d9

FOR harvest mitts at bed-rock prices call at TURNBULL'S.

Worthy of Note.

Messrs. Elliott & Tierney have secured the A. C. A. Camp Store. Visitors to this delightful outing need hardly be reminded that this valuable acquisition to the material comforts of camp life could not possibly be in better hands. Peterborough prices will be the rule. Mr. Elliott will be the dispenser, and this is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be en regle. d9

Personal.

The Emerson Southern Manitoba Times in its issue of July 7th, says:— "Joseph Walton, Esq., of Peterborough, Ont., father of Mr. Geo. Walton, manager of the Times, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Walton, arrived in town on Tuesday last. Mr. Walton is one of the Peterborough County's pioneers, and, at the age of 79, still enjoys the best of health, and takes a lively interest in the development of the Northwest. Mr. Walton was one of the party of the excursionists who are at present visiting the Province for purposes of prospecting, and intends visiting Brandon and other points before his return next month. He was greatly pleased at the appearance of the country and crops in the Red River Valley, through a large part of which he has driven since his arrival.

LADIES' belts in straw, web, alligator and leather, all new designs. For belts call at TURNBULL'S

Flags.

The following are the names of those who have promised flags for competition at the A. C. A. meet, to be held at Stoney Lake in August:—

W. D. McKendrick, Toronto	2
H. T. McKendrick, Galt	1
J. H. McKendrick, Toronto	2
Reig. Tyson, "	2
W. Thompson "	2
W. A. Cook, "	1
D. B. Jaques, "	3
W. A. Leyes, "	1
Thos. Gibson, Berlin	1
R. W. Waters, Norwood	1
A. W. Laurie, Petrolia	2
W. E. Roxburgh, Norwood	2
Mrs. Leigh, Toronto	1
Mrs. R. C. Strickland, Lakefield	1
Miss C. Strickland, "	1
Mrs Lillicrap, Bradford	1
Mrs. E. Brown, Toronto	1
Miss Burnett, Peterborough	1
Mrs. Lundy "	1

Those intending to donate flags should send their names to Mr. R. C. Strickland, Lakefield, Chairman of the Regatta Committee, as soon as possible. The number of flags is yet a good deal too small, and the Regatta Committee would be much obliged if the ladies of Peterborough would respond heartily in this matter. The meet opens on August 1st and the races commence on August 6th.

THE TWELFTH OF JULY

THE GLORIOUS AND IMMORTAL MEMORY CELEBRATED IN TOWN.

The Procession—The Decorations—Dispute about a Motto—A Fine Day For the Celebration.

To-day is the 12th of July, the "glorious and immortal" among the members of the Orange Order. This year Peterborough was selected as the place for holding the Midland district demonstration. The day dawned bright, and the weather turned out to be what the most ardent could have desired. Elaborate preparations were made, and everything by Monday evening was in readiness for the reception of the visitors. According to custom, the local lodges met in the morning at their various halls. At half-past eight o'clock the first train arrived, and during the forenoon thousands of people filled the incoming trains. As they came they were escorted to the Central Park, the rendezvous for the day.

By nine o'clock the streets were crowded and by the time the procession was about to start they were densely packed with spectators.

The route of the procession was gaily decorated with flags and arches. At the post office the True Blues erected a handsome double arch of evergreens, interwoven with red, white, blue and orange bunting. It bore the following mottoes:—"With Heart and Hand," "Welcome," "We are True Blues," and "No Ross Bible." Quite an excitement was occasioned by County Master McWilliams tearing this last motto down at about ten o'clock this forenoon. A number of the True Blues gathered, and for the moment it looked as if a fight would have broken out, but finally order was restored. Farther down street a larger arch bore the following mottoes:—"Our Country and our Queen," "Canada, our Home," "Union," "Truth," "Love," "L. O. L." Another double arch at the intersection of George and Simcoe streets was adorned with Union Jacks. Another arch at the market square was inscribed with "No Surrender," and "Welcome." At the new post office the Nassau Lodge built another double arch. On it were the following: "Aughram, Boyne and Derry," "Civil and Religious Liberty," "The Bible and the Crown," "L.O.L. No. 457," "Welcome to our Visiting Brethren."

THE PROCESSION.

The procession commenced to move shortly after 12 o'clock, noon, in the following order:—

The procession followed the route we described yesterday to the Central Park, where they dispersed to obtain very necessary refreshment.

In the afternoon an immense meeting was held in the Court House Park, where addresses were being delivered.

NOTES.

The motto "No Ross Bible" which was objected to by Mr. McWilliams, was hung out over the McWilliams Lodge True Blues hall this afternoon.

L. O. L. No. 281, North Dummer, did not take its place in the procession. They were at dinner at the time.

Refreshment stands by the score are in operation all over town.

The Sheppard Case.

TORONTO, July 12.—The Sheppard libel case was brought forward yesterday when, before Judge McDougall, beside whom sat Judge Morgan, the argument in the application to compel Mr. N. C. Love, J. P., to back a Montreal warrent for the arrest of Mr. Sheppard was heard. The judge reserved judgment till the following day.

LADIES' and children's parasols of every description, cheaper than the cheapest at TURNBULL'S.

The Rev. Dr. McGlynn.

NEW YORK, July 10.—It was expected that the excommunication of the Rev. Dr. McGlynn would be announced to-day from the pulpits of the several Catholic churches throughout the diocese, but no such announcement was made.

Queen's College Endowment.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 9.—The collection for Queen's College endowment fund will be resumed immediately. Principal Grant in his canvass will be ably second by Rev. Dr. Smith, of Warsaw, Wis., a former pastor here.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists. 50.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. However, it is now our intention to dispose of the Dry Goods Trade, and have consequently made up our minds to clear out the whole stock

AT COST AND UNDER.

This is one of the BEST Dry Goods stocks in the country, having been imported from the best markets direct to ourselves. Remember, this will be a GENUINE CLEARING OUT SALE. While we will still retain our Clothing Trade, yet we will, during this sale, offer ALL our Ready-made Clothing, for Men and Boys, (with all kinds of Furnishings) AT COST PRICE.

LACROSSE.

Riversides and Norwood—The Visitors Win by Two to One.

A lacrosse match was played on Tuesday afternoon on the Riverside Park, by teams representing the Riverside Club of Peterborough, and the Norwood Club. There was a fair attendance of spectators, especially considering [illegible]. Dr. Brennan was chosen referee, Mr. Joan Hackett, for the Riversides, and Mr. Chas. Clysdale, for Norwood, acted as umpires. The teams were composed as follows:—

RIVERSIDES.		NORWOOD.
J. Phelan	Goal	H. Pearce
T. Meagher	Point	R. Stewart
A. Rose	Cever Point	F. Stephenson
J. Connal	Defence Field	W. Wresse s
J. Carveth	do	H. Hill
R. H. Henderson	do	J. A. Harper
F. Larone	Centre Field	W. Hendren
J. Begley	Home Field	R. Hill
F. Packenham	do	A. Eaton
J. Meaher	Outside Home	F. Pearce
H. Neil	Inside Home	J. Jory
M. Halpin	Field Captain	J. C. McConkey

The first game was a lively and interesting one. Larone secured the ball at the face and it travelled towards the Norwood goal, but it was soon flying in the opposite direction. For eight minutes the game continued with varying fortunes, and some very nice play was shown. Finally Begley got the ball, ran up the field and threw square on the flags. Pearce checked it, but an assist from Carveth put it through and game was scored for the Riversides.

The second game was a little longer, but it, too, was interesting. Hendren got the ball on the start, but Larone soon after secured it and the play became general. The game was won for Norwood by Jory making a good throw and passing the ball between the stakes. Time, thirteen minutes.

The third game was tedious and wearisome. Now and then some good play was shown, but the stoppages, from one cause and another, took up more time than the play. The game was at last won for Norwood by Eaton, one hour and ten minutes after the game had been begun, and after fifteen or twenty minutes' play.

The fourth game was commenced but not finished. Stops were again frequent, and time (six o'clock) arrived and put an end to the match. The match was awarded to Norwood by two games to one.

Stephenson and H. Hill, of Norwood, left the field through illness, and Larone, of the Riversides, had to keep quiet for awhile on account of being squeezed against the fence.

There were several good players in both teams. Rose, T. Meagher, Phelan, Larone, and others on the Riverside team did good work, and with a little strengthening the team would be a strong one.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Man Killed Near Frazerville—Run off on the C. P. R.

This morning when the express on the Grand Trunk was a short distance east of Frazerville a fatal accident occurred. A deaf and dumb man named McCarral was walking along the track on the other side of a sharp curve. As soon as the driver caught sight of him he made every endeavor to stop the train, but it was too late. The man was hit and soon afterward expired. He was taken to Frazerville, where his people reside.

The morning train on the Canadian Pacific railway was delaided four hours on account of a run off which occurred on the eastern division, near Carleton Place.

The Listemann-Kellogg Concert.

The grand evening concert will be given this evening. The Boston Evening Transcript says:—Mr. Ronconi has a fine, sonorous voice and sings capitally. We cannot remember when the Cecilia has had such a good and satisfying leading solo singer.

'TWAS A FAMOUS VICTORY.

Peterborough Defeats East Toronto at Cricket by 284 to 51.

Peterborough scored a big win in the match with East Toronto, which was played here yesterday. Peterborough batted first and scored 284. Rutherford played a grand innings of 72 without a chance, and Sam Ray got 50 in the first-class style which is too well known to need any commendation from us, the two veterans putting on 104 runs while they were together. Thomas and Stratton kept up their reputations—35 and 31—and Rogers played very steadily for 22. The last three men proved difficult to get rid of, as they added 50 runs to the score. W. Hamilton kept up the family reputation by his fine 23, while Hatton got 11 by good cricket. Macdonell had 6 wickets for 70 runs, Foley 3 for 46, Chandler 1 for 70. The fielding was very fair all round; that of Macdonell and Welsh brilliant.

Logan and Stratton fairly demoralized the visitors, who scored 51. They could do nothing but stop Logan, while Stratton got the wickets, although most runs were got from him. Macdonell proved his great value as an all-round cricketer by scoring 14 in good shape, and S. Black was left not out with a useful 15. The Peterborough's fielding was better than usual, Edwy Stratton (substitute) being particularly brilliant in that line.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Demonstration Held on July 12th in Peterborough.

On the 12th of July the Salvation Army held another of their divisional demonstrations in Peterborough. Commissioner Coombs and Major Bailey, Chief of Staff, were present to grace the occasion.

The first contingent of officers and soldiers arrived at 7.15, and by 12 o'clock noon, thirty officers and a hundred and fifty soldiers were present.

The noon train brought the distinguished visitors together with Quintette No. 1, composed of Staff Capt. Griffiths, Capt. Wiggins, Capt. Connaught, Capt. Ashton and Lilly Griffiths. A march was formed and all proceeded to the Opera House where dinner was served.

At 2.30 o'clock a big meeting was held on the market square, after which a march was made to the barracks, where a holiness convention was held. Commissioner Coombs, Major Bailley and Adjutant Bolton delivered addresses. Several conversions were effected.

At 7 o'clock there was a big march out, followed by a mass meeting in the Opera House. "Shout Aloud Salvation Boy" opened the meeting and Capt. Wiggins and the Commissioner led in prayer. The Quintette sang and Adjutant Bolton led a free and easy meeting. Capt. Cannaught, Capt. Collton and Sailor Sam spoke, as did also Prof. Wiggins, Staff Capt. Griffiths and Major Bailey. During the evening the Commissioner dedicated a Sergeant Jim's child to the Lord's service. He concluded with an earnest appeal to the unsaved. Several more conversions followed.

NOTES.

The songs sang by the Quintette are composed by themselves. Their new choruses were well received.

The lassies created quite a sensation by all wearing red dresses. This is the only division in Canada where they dress with such uniformity.

The Listemann-Kellogg Concert.

Listemann will again favor the Peterborough people this evening. The Baltimore American remarks:—Mr. Listemann's violin performance received a perfect ovation. His execution of the Adagio and and Rondo of Paganini's Concerto, No. 1 was wonderful. The rapid movement of the Rondo, the treacherous double harmonies, and the artistic management of the bow, were all that could be desired. 1d10

AN OPEN LETTER TO W. CLUXTON, ESQ.

DEAR SIR.—In your letter Re "Mr. Butterworth's course" which was published in Saturday's issue of the REVIEW you make the statement that "some one may say, and justly say, that I am bold to draw the sword, or if you please, wield the pen against so powerful and practiced an opponent." Presuming from this that you are ready and willing to advocate the claims of "Commercial Union" or rather to use your influence for the purpose of inducing Canada to form a commercial partnership with the United States on a basis of full complete and unrestricted trade, I purpose asking you a few questions. I do so because from your years and experiences in commercial life any opinion you may express upon questions pertaining to trade and commerce are entitled to the very greatest respect, and as I am anxious to take a stand either for or against Commercial Union, I am quite willing to "set at your feet and learn from you." I therefore trust that you will with your usual kindness and courtesy, answer my few questions."

1st. As to the necessity for Commercial Union. Why do we want it? In reading the speeches of Mr. Wiman I am told in answer to this question: "Because it will benefit the farmers of Canada." Do you, sir, agree with Mr. Wiman? If so, I think you will also agree with me when I say that to prove that Commercial Union will benefit our farmers, you must first prove that the markets of the United States are superior to our own, not only in two or three articles, but for the greater part of the production of our farms, and the evidence to support such a contention must include the fact that the farmers of the United States are in a much better condition, financially and otherwise, than the farmers of Canada. Now, sir, is this a fact? If so, kindly give me the proof.

2nd. As a matter of fact the United States produces the same things as we produce, not only sufficient for their home use, but a surplus for exporting. As a matter of business would you advise the farmer of Canada to neglect a home market, where he is free from competition, to go and do business in a foreign market with his greatest competitor? Do you think our rival would buy from us, and would, as is claimed by the advocates of Commercial Union, admit his arrival into the realms of "Commercial Paradise"? I am well aware, sir, that the simple answer to the argument is that as a matter of fact the people of the United States are willing to take our barley, &c., if we are willing to take what they have to give us in return. What is it that we have not got that the United States propose to give us in return?

3rd. Mr. Darling in his speech before the Toronto Board of Trade in favor of Commercial Union, admits that Commercial Union means Commercial Ruin to the smaller Canadian manufacturers, and this is generally the opinion of the advocates of Commercial Union. Are you of the same opinion? If so, will you name for me some branch of Canadian manufacturing industry of the larger kind that it will not also affect?

4th. Will Commercial Union benefit Canada as a whole, that is admitting for the sake of argument that Commercial Union will benefit the farmer, and that it will advance his prosperity? Will it also advance the prosperity of the mechanic, will it increase his wages, will it increase the income of the professional gentleman? I ask you these questions because Mr. Wiman in his speech the other day at Dufferin Lake told the farmers that Commercial Union meant that the New Yorker would be willing to pay the Canadian farmer for first-class butter 60 to 80 cents per pound. Now, sir, if this is a fact, it means that the Canadian mechanic will have to pay double what he now pays for his butter, and the same reasoning applies to other articles mentioned by Mr. Wiman. Now, Mr. Cluxton, will Commercial Union give the mechanic increased pay (bearing in mind that it is admitted that Commercial Union will ruin the smaller manufactures; I suppose the kind we have in Peterborough in meant), to meet his increased expenditure? If not, then Commercial Union is not for the general good of the country, and for Parliament to legislate in favour of Commercial Union, it would be guilty of class legislation. And I ask you, sir, would it be wise for any Government to legislate for a class in preference to legislating for the general good? And would the farmers themselves benefit as a class, even on the assumption that they might gain as regards their surplus for exportation, when to obtain this doubtful advantage they would, as is admitted, have to injure their home market, bearing in mind that the home market takes nine-tenths of their produce and the foreign market only one-tenth? Where would be their net gain on the transaction?

5th. In conclusion let me ask you, were we to adopt a tariff equal to that of our neighbors, and it must be quite obvious to you that this would be the practical outcome of Commercial Union, discriminating to the verge of protection against foreign manufacturers or maintaining our present tariff against all countries except the United States, could not Great Britain, which is by far our largest customer and also the best customer of the United States, by retaliating crush us at a single blow? Whence should we derive our revenue in such a case? This question sir, I take from the Journal of Commerce, and perhaps you will not object, if I place before you for consideration, the concluding remarks of the able article from which the the above quotation is taken:—

"Prof. Goldwin Smith reckons without his host in assuming that Great Britain would not stand in the way of a commercial union between the two countries. We would suggest that Prof. Smith ascertain this to a certainty before proceeding further in the matter; and if any doubts should exist, a pic-nic could be organized to be held somewhere among the Cumberland Lakes, that country of romance, in the month of August. We should then be more certain of what we were about, and not as we are now, shooting in the dark. In such a case as that which Prof. Smith assumes there are more interests to be considered than those appertaining to the privileged or the governing classes. The Government of that country is responsible to the people—the opera ives and the manufacturers—and therefore would not consent to any discriminating tariff against her. Besides, our Act of Confederation specially provides against such a change. Taking it on what side we may it is impossible to see how such a scheme as Commercial Union is at all practicable, and we are half inclined to the belief that many of its advocates on this side of the line are employing it merely as a clever political dodge and laughing in their sleeves at the simple credulity of the farmers."

I trust, sir, that you will give, not only for my benefit, but for the benefit of many of your fellow citizens, who are interested in this great question, your opinions upon the foregoing question.

I am, very respectfully,
JUNO.

THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 12.—A number of Tory members of Parliament are urging an abandonment of the "Bankruptcy" and "Purchase" clauses of the land bill, and to make of it a short measure conceding judicial revision of rents, and to include "Lease Holders" clauses. The bill in this form, it is claimed, would be acceptable to the Opposition, and be sure of a speedy passage. The Unionist committee has declined to amend in favor of abating excessive judicial rents without compelling the tenants to have recourse to the bankruptcy court.

KILBRIDE FOR PARLIAMENT.

DUBLIN, July 12.—It is stated that Mr. Kilbride, who accompained Wm. O'Brien in his recent tour in America, will be nominated for parliament to fill the vacant seat for Carlow.

HARTINGTON AND HIS CHANCES.

LONDON, July 12.—Sir John Georst, conservative member for Chatham, speaking at Walsall to-day, expressed regret that Lord Hartington had declined the premiership for which Lord Salisbury had designated him.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 12.—Mr. Dillon resumed the debate on the Land Bill in the House of Commons to-night. He said he rejected the measure with contempt as utterly inadequate to meet the needs of the Irish tenantry.

PRESIDENT FLOQUET RESIGNS.

PARIS, July 12.—At the close of the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies yesterday there were well credited rumors afloat that President Floquet would resign, and that the Government was urging him to reconsider his determination. This morning, M. Floquet, in a letter to the Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies, announced his resignation of the office of President of the Chamber. General Cheseret, Minister of War during the Commune, has returned to Paris. It is rumored that he is here to organize a revolutionary party.

TAX TROUBLES

LONDON, July 12.—A despatch from Candia, Crete, says the Christian deputies have withdrawn their anti-tax manifesto and have appealed to the Sultan for redress. It is expected that a settlement of the troubles in Crete can now be reached.

Coal and the Duty.

OTTAWA, July 12.—Grit orators and Grit newspapers were never tired of claiming that the high price of coal in Ontario was due to the duty, and that if that was taken off down the prices would come. It is, therefore, puzzling the people of Ottawa a good deal to know why coal is 25 cents a ton dearer this year with the duty off than it was last year with the duty on. A local dealer gives the explanation that so soon as the New York ring heard that the duty was taken off they raised the price for Ontario 55 cents.

Decorating the Town.

The principal decorative arches that have been erected on George street have been secured by the Oddfellows that they may be used with appropriate changes on the occasion of the meeting of their Grand Lodge in our town next month. Private individuals who have prepared decorations of various kinds lately, should remember this, and should retain what they can for use in beautifying their buildings when the Grand Lodge of the I. O. O. F. visits our town, which should then be made to put on its best appearance in the eyes of these numerous visitors from all quarters. If the Gas Company would allow its very effective arch to remain till then, it would add greatly to the general appearance.

Obituary.

Another of the pioneers who came to this vicinity when the site of Peterborough was covered with forest trees has passed to his rest in the person of Joseph Smith. He was in the 82nd year of his age, being born in Cumberland, England, in 1805. He came to Canada in 1818 and settled near Port Hope. Soon after he came north and lived in the vicinity of Peterborough since. By his wife, Margaret Knox, who died twenty-five years ago, he had five sons and five daughters. Two sons and four daughters survive him.

Ladies go into ecstacies over the new perfume, "Lotus of the Nile."

A Laudable Intention.

As the committee in charge of the great Oddfellows demonstration, which is to take place here in August, will be under a very large expense in the proper management of the affair. It is sincerely to be hoped for the good name of our town that the citizens will lend every assistance in their power to the Oddfellows to make the reception of the visitors a credit to the community. Whatever surplus may be left over from gate receipts goes to the Protestant Home, so that not one dollar goes to the Oddfellows or their committees.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

RAILWAYS AND PROGRESS.

The fact that the Grand Trunk Railway is proceeding with the double tracking of its line between Toronto and Montreal, working at three different points with the intention of laying over 50 miles this year and completing the whole operation within three years, is a very satisfactory indication. It not only shows that one of the great Canadian through lines is flourishing, but also that it is fully alive to its duty of providing for traffic, especially that local business which great railway companies have been too apt to neglect in their mania for developing less remunerative through traffic. But it is not only from the Grand Trunk point of view that there is cause for congratulation. The additional provision made for transport shows how greatly the demand for railway facilities is increasing, a sure indication that the country and its business are flourishing. The growth of the Dominion and of its industries, marvellous as they have been in the past, are proceeding with accelerated velocity in spite of all the croaking of the despondent or dissatisfied.

It must be borne in mind that this step has been forced upon the Grand Trunk in spite of the competition, which it apparently so greatly dreaded, of another great through line. As we foresaw, the advent of the C.P.R. has wrought no mischief even to its rival, while it has undoubtedly benefitted the country at large. Our Dominion can well support two great main railways; there is ample room both for the Grand Trunk and the C. P. R., and the time is not far distant when they will both be put upon their mettle to accommodate the demands made upon their resources. Enlarged facilities will indeed stimulate increased custom.

Ere long the time must come when this will be true of the great North-West, as it is now of the older Provinces. The Grand Trunk cannot much longer be shut out of our prairie region, though probably that time has been somewhat postponed by the unwise course of its managers in allying themselves with the Northern Pacific Railway of the United States to attack their rival.

Canada and its industries, including its railways, will, in spite of any little mistakes and disagreements, contigue to progress. Every true Canadian should help according to his ability in the work.

THE POWER OF DISALLOWANCE.

In an article on the proposed interprovincial conference the Globe says:—

"The power of disallowance has been greatly abused by the Federal Government while led by Sir John Macdonald."

Why cannot the Globe discuss questions fairly? It well knows that under the Administration of its friends the power of disallowance was far more freely used than under the Conservatives. Taking the relative duration of the Ministries into consideration, there were far more cases of such interference by Reform Ministers of Justice and Reform Cabinet Councils than either before or since. And if by "abuse" the Globe claims to mean not the frequent but the improper use of "the power of Disallowance" it is no more nearly accurate. As to every case of such interference by Conservatives we could show interference on similar grounds by Reformers, and in fact Reform Ministers of Justice sometimes intervened on grounds that no Conservative Minister ever assumed to be sufficient to warrant action. If the Globe really objects to the power of Disallowance and not to the fact that Conservatives are entrusted by the people with the power to exercise it, our contemporary should abandon its unfair plan of condemning Conservatives while at least tacitly approving of its friends going still further in the same direction.

After all "the power of Disallowance" is part of our constitution, and disintegrating action is thus checked far more easily and cheaply than, as in the United States, by the heroic remedy of civil war.

One of the advocates of Commercial Annexation says:—

"The principle of doing what is best for Canada, even when it is prejudicial to the interests of the people of Great Britain, has been acted upon by the Conservative Government since 1878, and it has been three times approved of by the people at the polls."

Granting that such is the policy of the people of Canada, it is a very different thing from doing what is best for the United States, even when it is prejudicial to the people of Great Britain. The people of Canada wish to build up the industries of their own Dominion, but not to discriminate against imports from the Mother Country in favor of foreigners. The noisy little clique of Annexationists wishes to refuse to deal with the manufacturers of Great Britain, while allowing the manufacturers of the United States free access to crush out Canadian manufactures. There is a distinction between the two policies, amounting to a very important difference.

ICE CREAMS AND SODA WATER

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc

Down, right on to them, its center bowed out like the belly of a sail by the weight of the wind behind, swept the great storm cloud, while over all its surface the lightning played unceasingly, appearing and disappearing in needles of fire, and twisting and writhing serpentwise round about its outer edges.

The distant muttering of thunder that they had heard had died away, and now the great storm swept on in silent majesty, like the passage of a ghostly host, from which there arose no sound of feet or rolling of wheels. Only before it sped the swift angels of the wind, and behind it swung the curtain of the rain.

Even as Muller spoke a gust of icy air caught the cart and tilted it, and the lightning needles began to play more dreadfully than ever. The storm was breaking upon them.

"Come, get on, get on!" he shouted, "you will be killed here; the lightning always strikes along the water;" and as he said it he struck one of the wheelers sharply with his whip.

"Climb over the back of the seat, Mouti, and stand by to help me with the reins!" sung out John to the Zulu, who obeyed, getting between him and Jess.

"Now, Jess, hang on, and say your prayers, for it strikes me we shall have need of them. So, horses, so!"

The horses backed and plunged, but Muller on the one side and the smooth faced Boer on the other lashed them without mercy, and at last they went into the river with a rush. The gust had passed now, and for a moment or two there was renewed silence, except for the whirl of the water and the snakelike hiss of the coming rain.

For a few yards, ten or fifteen perhaps, all went well, and then John suddenly discovered that they were getting into deep water; the two leaders were evidently almost off their legs, and could scarcely stand against the current of the flooded river.

"Damn you!" he shouted back, "there is no drift here."

"Go on, go on, it is all right!" came Muller's voice in answer.

John said no more, but, putting out all his strength, tried to get his horses round. Jess turned herself on the seat to look, and just then came a blaze of lightning which revealed Muller and his two companions standing dismounted on the bank, the muzzles of their rifles pointing straight at the cart.

"Oh, God!" she screamed, "they are going to shoot us."

Even as the words passed her lips three tongues of flame flared out from the rifles' mouths and the Zulu, Mouti, sitting by her side, pitched heavily forward on to his head into the bottom of the cart, while one of the wheelers reared straight up into the air with a shriek of agony and came down with a splash into the river.

And then followed a scene the horrors of which baffles my poor pen. Overhead the storm burst in fury, and flash after flash of fork, or rather of chain, lightning fell into the river. The thunder, too, began to crack like the trump of doom; the wind rushed down, tearing the surface of the water into foam, and, catching under the tent of the cart, lifted it clean off the wheels, so that it began to float. Then the two leaders, mad with fear by the fury of the storm and the dying struggles of the off wheeler, plunged and tore at the traces till they actually rent themselves loose and vanished between the darkness overhead and the boiling water beneath. Away floated the cart, now touching the bottom and now riding on the water like a boat, oscillating this way and that, and slowly turning round and round. With it floated the dead horse, dragging down the other wheeler beneath the water. It was awful to see his struggles in the glare of the lightning, but at last he sank and choked.

And meanwhile, sounding sharp and clear across the din and hubbub of the storm, came the cracking of the three rifles whenever the flashes showed the whereabouts of the cart to the murderers on the bank. Mouti was lying still in the bottom on the bed plank, a bullet between his broad shoulders and another in his skull; but John felt that his life was yet whole in him, though something had hissed past his face and stung it. Instinctively he reached across the cart and drew Jess on to his knee, and cowered over her, thinking dimly that perhaps his body would protect her from the bullets.

Rip! rip! through the wood and canvas; phut! phut! through the air; but some merciful power protected them, and though one cut John's coat and two passed through the skirt of Jess' dress, not a bullet struck them. And very soon the shooting began to grow wild, and then that dense vail of rain came down and wrapped them so close that even the lightning could not show their whereabouts to the assassins on the bank.

"Stop shooting," said Frank Muller; "the cart has sunk, and there is an end of them. No human being can have lived through that fire and the Vaal in flood."

The two Boers ceased firing, and the Unicorn shook his head softly and remarked to his companion that the damned English people in the water could not be much wetter than they were on the bank. It was a curious thing to say at such a moment, but probably the spirit that animated the remark was not so much callousness as that which animated Cromwell, who flipped the ink in his neighbor's face when he signed the death warrant of his king.

Muller was also thinking of the warrant which he had forged. He must get it back somehow, even if——

"Let us take shelter under the bank there. There is a flat place, about fifty yards up, where the bank lies over. This rain is drowning us. We can't upsaddle till it clears. I must have a nip of brandy, too. Almighty! I can see that girl's face now! the lightning shone on it just as I shot. Well, she will be in heaven now, poor thing, if English people ever go to heaven."

It was the Unicorn who spoke, and the Vilderbeeste made no reply, but advanced with him to where the horses stood. They took the patient brutes that were waiting for their masters, their heads well down and the water streaming from them, and led them along with them. Frank Muller stood by his own horse thinking, and watched them vanish into the gloom. How was he to get that warrant back without dyeing his hands even redder than they were?

As he thought, an answer came. For at that moment, accompanied by a fearful thunderclap, there shot from the storm overhead, which had now nearly passed away, one of those awful flashes that sometimes end an African tempest. It lit up the whole scene round as light as day, and right in the white heart of it Muller saw his two companions in crime and their horses as the great king saw the men in the furnace. They were about forty paces from him, on the crest of the bank. He saw them, one moment erect; the next—men and horses falling this way and that, prone to the earth. And then it was all dark again. He staggered with the shock, and when it had passed rushed to the spot, calling the men by name; but no answer came, except the echo of his voice. He was there now, and the moonlight began to struggle faintly through the rain. Its pale beams lit upon two outstretched forms—one lying on its back, its distorted features gazing up to heaven, the other on its face. By them, the legs of the nearest sticking straight into the air, lay the two horses. They had gone to their account. The lightning had killed them, as it kills many an innocent man in Africa.

Frank Muller looked; and then, forgetting about the warrant and everything else in the horror of what he took to be a visible judgment, rushed to his horse and galloped wildly away, pursued by all the terrors of hell.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

The firing from the bank had ceased, and John, who still kept his head (being a rather phlegmatic specimen of the Anglo-Saxon race), realized that, for the moment at any rate, all danger from that source was ended. Jess lay perfectly still in his arms, her head upon his breast; and a horrible idea struck him that she might be shot—perhaps already dead!

"Jess, Jess," he shouted, through the turmoil of the storm, "are you all right?"

She lifted her head an inch or two—"I think so," she said. "What is going on?"

"God only knows, I don't. Sit still, it will be all square."

But in his heart he knew that it was not "all square," and that they were in imminent danger of death from drowning. They were whirling down a raging river in a cart. In a few moments it was probable that the cart would upset, and then——

Presently the wheel bumped against something, and the cart gave a great lurch and then scraped along a little.

"Now for it," thought John; for the water was pouring over the flooring. Then came a check, and the cart leaned still farther over.

Crack! The pole had gone, and the cart swung round bows, or rather box, on to the stream. What had happened was this: They had stuck across a rock that projected up from the bed of the river, the force of the current having washed the dead horses to the one side and the cart to the other. Consequently they were anchored to the rock, as it were, the anchor being the dead horses and the cable the stout traces of untanned leather. So long as these traces and the rest of the harness held they were, comparatively speaking, safe; but of course they did not know this. Indeed, they knew nothing. Above them rolled the storm, and round them the waters seethed and the rain hissed. They knew nothing except that they were helpless living atoms, tossing between the wild waters and the wilder night, with imminent death staring them in the face, around, above and below. To and fro they swung, locked fast in each other's arms, and as they did so came that awful flash that, though they knew it not, sent two of the murderers to their account, and for an instant, even through the sheet of rain, illumined the space of boiling water and the long lines of the banks on either side. It showed the point of rock to which they were fixed, it glared upon the head of one of the poor horses, tossed up by the driving current, as though it were trying to rise from its watery death, and revealed the form of the dead Zulu, Mouti, lying on his face, one arm hanging over the edge of the cart and dabbling in the water that ran level with it, in ghastly similarity to some idle passenger in a pleasure boat who lets his fingers slip softly through the stream.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

THE GREAT CANADIAN ROUTE.

The first cargo of tea from Japan over the Canadian Pacific railroad arrived in London last week in thirty and one-half days, which is ten days less than is required by the Isthmus of Suez. Columbus believed the shortest route to the Orient was westward, and from Henry Hudson to Sir John Franklin Europe expended a vast amount of treasure in the effort to find the northwest passage to China and the Indies. The present age has discovered both the existence and the uselessness of the northwest passage, and it has now demonstrated the fact that the quickest route to the far east, as Columbus rightly surmised, was over the western sea and across the great continent that rose before the early explorers who were seeking a short cut to India.—New York Sun.

The Listemann-Kellogg Concert.

The Listemann-Kellogg concert takes place this evening. The Winona Republican says:—The pure contralto of Abby Clark Ford was greatly admired, and her solos never failed of a hearty demonstration. When she sang the aria "Why, my Soul," a storm of applause followed. 1d10

Worthy of Note.

Messrs. Elliott & Tierney have secured the A. C. A. Camp Store. Visitors to this delightful outing need hardly be reminded that this valuable acquisition to the material comforts of camp life could not possibly be in better hands. Peterborough prices will be the rule. Mr. Elliott will be the dispenser, and this is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be en regle. 6d9

The Listemann-Kellogg Concert.

Miss Kellogg will appear at the grand evening concert to-night. The Boston Gazette says:—Miss Kellogg sang the selections from Handel with unexceptional taste, and in a large and chaste style that developed their beauties with charming effect. Her clear and brilliant voice, her pure intonation, added to the strong and appropriate dramatic feeling which characterised her efforts through the whole concert, caused her singing to be listened to with unqualified pleasure. 1d10

China and Its Millions.

Mr. J. F. Smith, late of the Polyclinic Institute, New York, and missionary designatee to the province of Honan, Northern China, will conduct the meeting in St. Paul's Church this evening at 8 o'clock. Mr. J. H. Buchanan, B.D., also of Queen's Mission Band, will assist. The Foreign Mission Committee of the Presbyterian Church intend establishing a new mission in this province of twenty millions, where now there is not one station. Out of many volunteers Messrs. Smith, of Queen's, and Goforth, of Knox, are now in preparation for the work, and will leave next spring for China. The mission will include an hospital, of which Mr. Smith will have charge. Those who would like to know more of the Middle Kingdom and its millions will be glad to hear these young men

THE TWELFTH OF JULY.

THE GREAT GATHERING IN THE GARDENS.

Speeches by Grand Officers and Local Clergy—The Ross Bible Denounced—An Orderly Crowd.

The afternoon programme of the Twelfth of July celebration consisted in addresses in the Horticultural Gardens.

After dinner the various lodges, headed by their respective bands and carrying banners, moved toward the Gardens. At half-past two o'clock the crowd numbered upwards of six thousand people. The uproar was something deafening. Half a dozen brass bands and about a score of fife and drum bands, were all in operation at the same time. It was some time before comparative quiet could be restored.

Those who occupied seats on the platform were:—Bro. Robinson, Grand Master Ontario East, Black Knights; Bro. Gordon, Grand Treasurer, Ontario East; Bro. Anderson, Grand Treasurer, Lodge of British America; Bro. Smithett, Grand Chaplain of Ontario East; Bro. J. White, P.G.M., Ontario East; Bro. Johnston, P. G. M., Ontario East; Bro. Collins, Grand Master, Ontario East; Bro. Robb, County Master, East Peterborough; Bro. Holland, District Master, Port Hope; Bro. Hamilton, District Master, Peterborough; Bro. Vance, P.D.M., Cavan; Bro. Warham, Deputy County Master; Bro. Wier, Past County Master.

Bro. J. B. McWilliams, County Master, acted as chairman, and in calling the meeting to order, welcomed the people to Peterborough.

The Rev. Dr. SMITHETT, Grand Chaplain, was called on. The beating of drums reminded him of a camp story. Out west a man and his wife came into the camp—also a baby. The miners invited the man and his wife to an entertainment which they had got up. But as soon as the music began the baby commenced to scream. The mother was going to carry the baby out but the miners shouted "let 'er scream." They hadn't heard a baby cry for a dozen years. So, seeing that the 12th of July came but once in a year the drumers might be permitted to beat away (Applause). They had come here to-day to avow their principles and celebrate their great day. They had been called Orangists because they would not bow down to the man of power of the "seven hills," because they wished to preserve their liberties as well as their Protestantism. The times were out of joint. Something was rotten in the state of Denmark. They came to-day to celebrate the establishing of civil and religious liberty to the people of this empire. It was their duty to see that such rights were not trampled under foot, and it was a grand and glorious sight to see this vast multitude out to do honor to the day. (Hear, hear.) They stood out for truth, liberty and justice, and above all loyalty to the throne. (Cheers.) On a visit to the Western States he told a friend of his who talked of the Fenian conquest of Canada, that Canada could raise 10,000 men at the tap of the drum, and 150,000 could be put in the field in three months. He related a story of a young man who sang in a choir in his friend's church. It leaked out that he was, besides being Adjutant-General of the State, a member of the Fenian Brotherhood. His friend protested, but it turned out that the young man was no other than a detective in the service of the Canadian Government, and was in possession of all the Fenian secrets. (Cheers.) If the Fenians were going to fight secretly they would be fought on their own plan. Concluding, he exhorted the brethren to be not only patriotic, but to be moral and religious, for the Orange Order would leave its impress on the generation. If the Orangemen lived true to their principles they would be a great blessing; but if not they would bring on themselves the contempt of the enemies of God.

JOHN WHITE, ex.-M.P., P.G.M., was glad to see such a great demonstration in this enterprising, pushing place, soon to be one of our handsomest inland cities. He dealt with the professions of Orangeism, and what the order existed for. Looking from ocean to ocean he beheld a grand country, but it appeared to him that Canada was governed by too much partyism and not enough Protestantism. Canada was being surrendered to the minority. At no distant day they would have to call a halt and shout "no surrender." (Hear, hear.) Some people denounced the Mail newspaper, but the Mail did not use harsh words against the Church of Rome. It was simply pointing out danger. It was said that Quebec had no other rights than those given by the Court of St. James, and that they had a right to build all the churches they wanted That was all well enough if it affected only the people of Quebec. But when Ontario people had to pay the piper it was a different thing. The roads and bridges there were built with Dominion money, and a great part of the taxes levied went to the Church. Quebec was kept bankrupt and was continually shouting for better terms—for Ontario's money. The Ontario taxpayer was handing over what he ought to be buying dresses for his wife and children with. They would soon have to say "so far and no farther." (Hear, hear.) There was a few points he wished to bring before them. In the first place they were governed too much. Would to God that Ireland had part of the home rule we had. (Laughter and cheers.) We had too many civil servants. In 1878 the Conservative party declared themselves in favor of reciprocity as soon as the States would agree to it. When that arrangement was made he wanted to see it fairly framed. (A voice—What about the Ross bible?) The speaker gave Archbishop Lynch credit with being ingenious enough to induce the doctors of the Protestant churches to consent to a bible of his own making. But what did the people do? They tore it in shreds. (Cheers.) They would have no Ross bible. They wanted the true word of God. (Cheers.) From neither Mowat Macdonald or anyone else would they take anything but the unadulterated Word of God. (Applause.) He spoke of Orange incorporation and said that in Parliament he made those Protestant cowards show their hands. Speaking of Home Rule he took the position it was not the business of Canadians to meddle with it. At the conclusion three cheers were given for Mr. White.

Bro. JOHNSON, P. G. M., O. E., said that he regarded the introduction of the Ross bible as a mistake of a man whom he respected. However good the selections might be he wanted to make his own selections, and as a member of a Board of Education that was the way he voted. They didn't want a part, they wanted the whole Word. (Applause). Looking around, he said that it was a strange thing that there were no Orange M. P.'s or M. P. P.'s here. He asked how it was. (A Voice—Where's Stratton). Continuing, the speaker said that candidates liked the Roman Catholic vote better than the Orange vote, because the Orange vote was divided, but the Roman Catholic vote was solid. The little politicians would watch all year to see which way the parish priest would turn or twist, because whichever way the priest went the people had to follow. It was because the Catholic vote was solid that the priest was looked after so much. He went on to give a description of the Battle of the Boyne. He said James had altogether the best of the position, being posted on the hills. This victory was a proof against the saying that "God always fights with the heaviest battalions." It was the duty of them, as decendents of their forefathers, to uphold the liberties handed down to them. and the measure of their success would be according to their unity. He urged them to avoid all dissension. They should go forward to propagate their grand and glorious principles for the uplifting of the world.

Bro. COLLINS, Grand Master spoke a few words and retired amid cheers.

The Rev. I. TOVELL was pleased with the day's demonstration but what particularly touched his heart was the carrying of the Bible—an open bible too—in the procession. He had been kindly introduced by the chairman to this throng of Orangemen and he was going to say something to surprise them. He was in sympathy with the Orange Society, but he was also in sympathy with a considerable section of the Roman Catholic Church. He prayed that success would attend Dr. McGlynn, of New York. He beseeched them not to forget those people who were struggling for political independence — for freedom to vote as their conscience dictated (Cheers). He believed they were all turning Catholic by the way they were cheering (Laughter). Dr. McGlynn was a devoted Catholic but that was nothing to them. They liked to see freedom wherever it was. They liked to see people enjoying the full liberty of citizens. Even there would be no Orange vote opposed to the Catholic vote, but each would be voting for the other as common citizens. He introduced a sentiment in favour of total prohibition which the crowd cheered.

The Rev. J. C. Wilson, of Ashburnham and Bro. Anderson, Grand Treasurer, each made brief speeches and the meeting broke up with cheers for the Queen, Bro. McWilliams, Bro. White, the wives, daughters and sweethearts.

The lodges and bands then marched away and departed on the outgoing trains.

THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1887.

AN EXCURSIONIST BEHEADED.

A Belleville Man Returning from Peterborough, Killed by a Train.

John Quincey, a laborer, of Belleville, who was in Peterborough on the 12th of July, lost his life in a terrible manner when returning home that night. Nothing was known of the accident until next morning, when the headless body of a man was found between the rails on the track near Hayden's Corners. The identity, the Intelligencer says, was not known until the hat was found. In it was written the name, "John Quincey." His pocket handkerchief was marked with the same name.

A passenger on the first train from Peterborough said that Quincey was on that train and would get off at Hayden's Corners. Others of the man's friends did not miss him and were not aware that anything was wrong until informed of his horrible death. His son Chas Quincey was a passenger on the same train, but the crowd was so great that he did not miss his father.

Mr. James Beckett, who lives at Hayden's Corners, just across the track from where the accident happened, told a reporter that his wife saw a man enter his gate and heard him call "Jim" several times. He, Mr. Beckett, was in the city and his wife did not recognize the voice. Getting no response he left the yard and went toward the track. Shortly after the second excursion train passed. After that she neither saw nor heard anything more. Mr. Beckett is a cousin of Quincey's wife. It is supposed that he left the train intending to call on his cousin. From what Mrs. Beckett says and from the time that the train was known to pass Haden's Corners, the accident must have happened between 10 and 11 o'clock.

The body was found east of Palmer's hotel. In the grass and sand about the cattle guard were the prints of a man's feet. The marks indicated that he had been standing on the one spot. The cattle guard was short. At the east end the first blood marks were found. They are on the outside of the north rail. A crimson trail marked the ground along the track for about 30 feet. At the end of the trail was the man's head, clean cut from the body. Evidently the pilot wheel had struck the man at the back of the head and cut away part of the lower jaw. It had rolled along the track until its momentum was spent, mutilated beyond recognition.

The body, as stated, was between the rails, a mangled mass of flesh and bones. The legs were broken near the ankles, the feet hanging by the sinews. The arms were cut at the wrists in the same manner. The body was 40 feet down the track from where the first blood marks were found. The remains were interred on Wednesday afternoon, Dr. Willson, coroner, having decided that an inquest was not necessary.

THE ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—The Toronto Mail, in a recent issue, contained what purported to be the result of the annual examinations at the Military College at Kingston. The report, so far as one of the cadets, at least, is concerned, was doubly incorrect. The name, as given in the Mail, was Varlee, whereas it should have been Barlee; the place in his class, too, assigned him by the Mail, was No. 20, whereas by the official statement, which I have just received from Col. Oliver, the Commandant, I find he stands 11th in his class of 24. The Mail said that the list published in that paper was arranged in "order of merit," and, that being the case, special care should have been taken that the list was correctly framed.

A CRITICAL SITUATION.

Sullen and Resolute Strife Expected in Paris Next Thursday.

LONDON, July 13.—As the situation in Paris now appears, it would surprise nobody to see the populace arrayed in sullen and resolute strife against the military on the occasion of the annual fete next Thursday. In spite of the positive orders of prohibition issued by the Government against any demonstration of sympathy with General Boulanger of whatsoever character, popular manifestations of regard for that officer multiply daily, and the Government has only its own blind and undignified policy of petty persecution, pursued against the late War Minister, to thank for the predicament it now finds itself in. If the Government had been content to treat General Boulanger as his distinguished services to the country on the field of battle and as the executive head of the army entitled him to be treated at the hands of men occupying positions commonly presumed to be held by statesmen, the French ministry would not now be engaged in covering itself with ridicule by making war upon barrel organs, street bands and stationery shops, and in other ways recalling the fable of the ass kicking a dead lion. M. Clemenceau, for some unaccountable reason, abandoned General Boulanger in Monday's debate; but even he, strong as he is, cannot at this late day, stem the current of General Boulanger's popularity, whatever may be his object in deserting his old friend at a time when he should have needed no urging to defend him against the aspersions of his jealous critics.

ONTARIO'S PAYMENT TO QUEBEC.

Windfall for Mr. Mercier—A Nice Cheque Sent by Mr. Mowat.

A despatch from Quebec to the Globe says:—The effects of the good understanding between the Mercier and Mowat Governments and of the Quebec Premier's late visit to Toronto are beginning to manifest themselves in a tangible way, to the intense disappointment of Mr. Mercier's opponents. The Treasurer of Quebec has just received from the Treasurer of Ontario a letter enclosing two cheques for $50,000 each on the banks of Toronto and Commerce respectively, or $100,000 in all, as a settlement on account of the division of the Common School fund which has been so long in dispute between the two Provinces and which the different Tory Governments of this Province vainly endeavoured to arrange. The balance of the claims is to be settled by friendly arbitration.

THE ROSS BIBLE.

A Stirring Time at the Corner of George and Brock Streets.

Since the 12th of July a petty warfare has been in progress between members of McWilliams Lodge of True Blues and Mr. J. B. McWilliams, County Master of the Orange Order.

On the morning of July 12th a motto, "No Ross Bible," was erected on the True Blues' arch at the corner of George and Brock streets, but as soon as Mr. McWilliams saw it he tore it down. This angered a number of the True Blues who at first refused to march. Subsequently they came to an arrangement and marched. The motto in the meantime, however, was carried to the True Blues' hall and there displayed in front of the building.

On Wednesday, Simon Wier, one of the True Blues, took it to his father's tailor shop to get it mended, it having been somewhat torn. But as soon as Mr. Wier, the elder, spied what it was, he took possession of it and hied away to Mr. McWilliams' office. Then another motto was printed and put up on the arch, to be torn down again by Mr. McWilliams at about eight o'clock in the evening. A crowd loitered around the arch till midnight to see what might be done, but nothing resulted, save a scrimage in Mr. McWilliams' office. After he tore down the motto he took it, too, to his office. A crowd followed and demanded the motto. Mr. McWilliams seized the foremost and put out the whole party.

To-day, however, the scene became quite lively. The third motto had been painted and the True Blues had it put up on poles. Their object, it seemed, was to have it photographed under the arch. Mr. Sproule appeared at the Bank of Commerce corner with his camera and a crowd stood around to see what could be seen. Mr. McWilliams was observed taking stock of what was going on. Presently a crowd issued from the Commercial House with the motto on poles Two True Blues held up the motto while it was being photographed. Then Mr. McWilliams arrived with an axe, made his way through the crowd and commenced to chop down the arch. Someone took hold of the axe and went swinging around with it. It was an exceedingly unsafe thing to be near it, for they went flourishing it around regardless of anything or anybody. In the meantime several, including two assistants in his Crown Timber office, came to back Mr. McWilliams, and a tussle among half a dozen or so ensued. Mr. McWilliams still kept possession of the axe, but the True Blues pulled him to one side so that the photographing might be accomplished. He then went on chopping at the arch, at which the True Blues cheered, seeing that they had their photograph. Mr. McWilliams continued chopping and the True Blues marched down street carrying the motto.

WITHOUT any doub, KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

ORANGEMEN ATTACKED.

A Riot in Liverpool—A Lively Time in Paterson, N.J.

LIVERPOOL, July 13.—The Orange ceremonies here yesterday resulted in a riot. The paraders were attacked by crowds of Catholics, who threw stones and other missiles at them in the ranks. The police forcibly removed the party emblems carried by the Orangemen. About a dozen persons were severely injured. Many wer treated at the hospital for cuts and bruises

PATTERSON, N. J., July 13.—There was rioting here yesterday and last evening. The local Orangemen paraded and picnicked here with the Newark and Jersey City lodges. In the afternoon the paraders were attacked with stones on Mill street, but the police soon stopped the trouble and arrested James Neary, who was armed with a pistol. This made the ribbonmen angry and at night there was a crowd in the streets ready for a fight. At the depot when the visitors departed a small row occurred, which resulted in two arrests. While the local Orangemen were marching back from the station to their hall on Main street a hackman tried to drive through the ranks of the procession. This caused a lively riot in which many persons were bruised, but none, it is thought, dangerously. A strong force of police soon arrived on the scene and used their clubs freely, dispersing the mob and making twelve arrests. The Orangemen dispersed in groups. There was great excitement on the streets up to a late hour.

American Fishing Vessels.

PORTLAND, Me., July 13.—The fishing schooner Lilla B. Fennell, of Portland, arrived here yesterday morning from the Gulf of St Lawreuce, with a cargo of over one hundred barrels of splendid mackerel on board. Captain Fennell reports that the fishing this season seems to prove excellent. The owners of fishing vessels have instructed their captains to keep clear of the Canadian coasts, and not enter any harbor under any circumstances, unless compelled to do so by stress of weather in order to obtain shelter, or for the purpose of obtaining wood, coal or water and then only when, on account of dead winds, they are unable to reach American ports.

Bank Run Not Serious.

LONDON, Ont., July 13.—In connection with a slight run on the Bank of London on Monday, the announcement is made that all excitement in connection with the bank has entirely subsided. The Bank of Montreal has generously offered to place its resources at the disposal of the Bank of London should it be necessary to make use of them, but the condition of the latter institution is such that it is not expected that the assistance will be required. The Bank of London kept open an hour later last evening for the convenience of depositors.

Excluding the Canadians.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., July 13.—East Saginaw mill employes are quietly working to secure, in whatever manner they can, the exclusion of the French Canadians, who come over during the winter to work in the woods, at which time men can only find work in the lumber camps. In many cases these Canadians are brought in response to advertisements for men published by the local lumbermen in Canadian papers. This looks to the laboring men here very much like a violation of the statute prohibiting the importation of foreign contract labor.

Dr. McGlynn.

NEW YORK, July 12.—Dr. McGlynn said, last night, that when he received the Eucharist at the hands of Father Brosnan in the Church of Our Lady of Victories, Brooklyn, early Sunday morning, neither he nor the officiating priest had notice of his excommunication. He denies the statement that he is going to make an appeal to Rome and fight for reinstatement. He will not present himself at any Catholic altar for communion to create any unseemly disturbance.

The Irish Woollen Industry

NEW YORK, July 13.—Mr. Peter White, representing the new company to develop the Irish woollen industry, recently organised by Messrs. Parnell and Davitt, returned to Dublin per steamer Britannic this morning, taking with him as a result of six weeks' work in America sample orders to the value of $200,000. Mr. White expresses himself as delighted with the reception given his project

Americans Want the Benefit.

PORT HURON, Mich., July 13.—The city of Port Huron will address a resolution and memorial to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of compelling the Grand Trunk Railway to locate its elevator, warehouses and stock yards, now at Point Edward, at Port Huron, to give Americans the benefits from handling American products now enjoyed by Canadians.

Coal Mine on Fire.

PITTSTON, Pa., July 12.—Otto, one of the best collieries of the Philadelphia and Reading Company, located at Branchdale, near Pottsville, is on fire and is probably doomed to complete destruction, involving a loss approximating $1,000,000. It is believed the fire caught from steampipes. The mine shipped a hundred cars a day and employed 300 men and boys.

The Knights Templar.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., July 13.—The Great Priory of Knights Templar of Canada, in session here, have decided not to yield to the contention of the Great Priory of England and will not withdraw the warrant, which has been legally issued to metropolitanpreceptory No. 28 at Melbourne, Victoria Australia.

Heavy Action.

MADISON, Wis., July 13.—The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad has begun suit against the Chicago and St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha Road to recover lands and benefits valued at $25,000,000.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 13.—In the House of Commons, last evening, after Mr. Dillon had spoken, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre (Home Ruler and Liberal) said that notwithstanding the damaging criticisms, even of their Liberal supporters, the Government offered no concessions with the exception of the clause admitting lease holders to the benefits of the act of 1881 and one or two more minor proposals. He was convinced that the bill would do more harm than good. The bankruptcy clauses, he said, ought to be dropped, for they would benefit nobody but rapacious landlords. The bill offered no real remedy for the main grievance of Irish tenants. The Government had increased the difficulty by not consulting with the Irish members of the House, and the bill would only aggravate the very evils it was intended to cure. Upon motion of Lord Randolph Churchill, the debate was adjourned.

RESIGNATION WITHDRAWN.

PARIS, July 13.—M. Floquet has withdrawn his resignation as President of the Chamber. The newspapers agree that M. Rouvier's pluck has secured for the Cabinet a new lease of life.

THE LIVERPOOL CUP.

LONDON, July 13.—The Liverpool cup was won to-day by Castor, Chippeway second, Kildare third.

TURKEY APPROVES.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 13.—It is stated here that Turkey has approved the election of Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Cobourg as Prince of Bulgaria.

PLAN OF CAMPIGN IN DANGER.

LONDON, July 13.—The Irish Peers in and out of the House of Lords, headed by the Duke of Abercorn, are forming an association designed to combat the Irish "plan of campaign" after the Crimes Act goes into operation, and have already raised £50,000 for the purpose of carrying on their warfare. Precisely how the money is to be applied, or what methods of procedure the association will pursue, is not stated, but, presumably, the intention is to aid in the prosecution of persons arrested for participation in the "plan," and to give all possible assistance to landlords in the enforcement of their claims against tenants.

GERMAN [illegible]

Gazette advises the German residents in Paris to close their places of business and not show themselves in public on Thursday next, the anniversary of the fall of the Bastile.

PARNELLITE ACTION.

LONDON, July 13.—The Parnellite members of Parliament had a meeting last night and decided to support Mr. Bannerman's motion that the Land Bill be rejected. It was also decided to formulate a series of amendments for the committee stage.

AN APPEAL TO UNIONISTS.

LONDON, July 13.—The Standard (Con.) appeals to the Unionist leaders to assist the Conservatives in the Brenton and Horney contests to their utmost in order to avoid a repetition of the Conservative defeats at Spalding and Coventry.

PAUL'S ADVICE.

PARIS, July 13.—Paul de Cassagnac advises all who can to leave Paris on Thursday.

IRISH EVICTIONS.

DUBLIN, July 13.—Further evictions were effected at Arklow yesterday. A stout resistance was made by the tenants. Messrs. Redmond and Crilly, Nationalist members of Parliament, and a number of Canadian gentlemen were present. Mr. Dillon promises to visit Arklow to-day.

THE SUGAR BOUNTIES QUESTION.

LONDON, July 13.—The Government has invited the European Powers to take part in a conference in London or elsdwhere on the sugar bounties question.

HICKS-BEACH IMPROVING.

LONDON, July 13.—Sir Micheal Hicks-Beach, formerly Chief Secretary of Ireland, but who resigned on account of cataracts in his eyes, writes to the papers that his sight is improving and that his health is restored and he expects to resume his parliamentary duties in the autumn.

THE QUEEN AT HATFIELD.

LONDON, July 13.—The Queen to-day attended a garden party at Hatfield House, the residence of Lord Salisbury in Herfordshire. The town of Hatfield was en fete in honor of her Majesty's presence and the houses and streets were gaily decorated. Crowds of people greeted the Queen along the route with great enthusiasm.

THE C. P. R. ROUTE.

LONDON, July 13.—Sir Donald Smith of Montreal, member of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to-day had an interview in the House of Commons with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Postmaster-General, all of whom, it is stated, favor the proposed Canadian Pacific mail route to the east.

TREVELYAN'S OPPONENT.

LONDON, July 13.—Evelyn Ashley, Conservative, will oppose Mr. Treveiyan, the Liberal candidate, in the contest for the seat in the House of Commons for the Brighton division of Glasgow.

THE EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 13.—The Sultan persists in his refusal to sign the convention with England in reference to Egypt in its present form, notwithstanding he is urgently advised to ratify it by both Germany and Italy.

ORANGE DENUNCIATIONS

Of Infidels, Agnostic Atheists and Others —A Procession Stoned.

LONDON, July 13.—At an Orange demonstration at Glasgow yesterday, Prof. Macklin moved that the British Constitution, being Scriptural, Protestant and Christian, cannot consistently with its own safety furnish equal rights and privileges to Infidels, Papists and Agnostic Atheists, who deny its principles, together with those who assert and maintain them. He made a long speech denouncing Popery. J. McManus followed in the same strain. Capt. Henderson, in seconding the motion, described Mr. Gladstone as the greatest Jesuit in the country. Councillor McCormie supported the motion and it was adopted unanimously. The Roman Catholics heard of the proceedings and stoned the procession on its return to the city.

BRITISH COLUMBIAN MARKETS.

It appears as if the Toronto Mail is hardly yet at home in its new role of a Commercial Annexationist, for its arguments are very contradictory. In reply to a question from us, it says:—

"The reason why British Columbia does not find a better market for its coal, timber and fish on the Canadian prairies than it finds in San Francisco, is the circumstance that there is no market for the coal and timber on the prairies, whereas there is one in San Francisco. The North-West people are mining their own coal; and, sparse as the forced growth in the West is, there is sufficient wood there yet to meet the modest requirements of the various settlements. As to fish, if the British Columbians were to sell none until the North-west settlers were ready to buy from them the salmon industry would have to be suspended."

If the North-West settlers do not want timber, coal nor canned salmon, why is the Mail so anxious that the North-West should be enabled to procure timber, coal and canned salmon from St. Paul, Minnesota, where, as the Mail knows, they are produced so abundantly? And why should San Francisco be such an excellent market for British Columbia coal, timber and canned salmon, as if the Pacific coast of the United States did not produce them all?

The Mail continues in reply to another question from us:—

"The reason why British Columbia might get its cottons and woollens better from San Francisco than from Ontario and Quebec is the circumstance that the province exports to San Francisco products the proceeds from which will pay for the cottons and woollens bought there, whereas it sends nothing to Ontario and Quebec which it can exchange for Ontario or Quebec goods."

Commerce in these days is not a mere system of barter and countries do not refuse to sell their produce unless they can get merchandize in return, however convenient that may be. It is hardly a sufficient reason for British Columbians to wear New England made stuffs carried by way of San Francisco, because they can get them by barter. In taking this new ground the Mail quietly abandons its pretence that New England via San Francisco is a nearer market for British Columbia than the old Provinces of Canada via the C. P. R. As to sending nothing to Ontario to exchange for our goods, they may send us some of their canned salmon if they choose, and we will not refuse to eat it; or they might send us some of their gold, for that is always acceptable. No doubt they can produce other things they might send us.

The Mail concludes by graciously consenting that British Columbians may trade with other Canadians if they please. Its objection, it says, is that British Columbians should be forced to trade with us. Yet the Mail is now vehemently advocating commercial Annexation, by which the British Columbians would be forced, by a higher tariff than it says now coerces them, to trade with the United States rather than with Great Britain, Australia, Japan, etc.

British Columbia has gained enormously by the policy of the Dominion, it has great present and prospective benefits from its connection with the Empire, and if it has to make a slight sacrifice for the common good such is the lot of men in all communities, and it might well be content with the bargain. Yet the Mail invites its people to throw themselves into the arms of foreigners, to have as few dealings as possible with other Canadians and none with the rest of the Empire. The fact is the Mail has not yet made up its mind whether it is a freetrader or a protectionist, and advances contradictory arguments on both sides. It is only sure then it is for Commercial Annexation with Political Annexation to follow.

THE New York Times in an article on the "Monopolies called Trusts," sounds a warning in particular as regards that iniquitous ring the Standard Oil Trust, which seems to be grasping additional lines of business for the clique. The Times says:—

"There will be a contest between the people and the mysterious Trust monopolies, and when the people take hold of the subject in earnest the courts and the Legislatures will be with them."

If the Commercial Annexationists can have their way, Canada might be in time to suffer from and perhaps to conquer those robber rings of the United States.

WILL the Globe kindly give us the details on which it bases the following assertion? :

"One hundred dollars would be a very welcome and very material addition to the annual income of many Canadian farmers. There is scarcely a farmer in Ontario whom Unrestricted Reciprocity would not benefit to a greater extent every year."

In this locality the farmers cannot see any such gain from Unrestricted Reciprocity. Last winter in Peterborough there were packed about 6,000 hogs, besides those otherwise consumed, and our farmers would have to be recouped their loss on this home market before they could begin to count any net gain on other produce. They would incur other losses of this kind that would more than counterbalance any apparent gain.

The results of the rifle meeting at Frankfort-on-the-Maine show that the old supremacy of the Swiss marksmen is gone, the bulk of the prize-winners having been Southern Germans.

Judgment was given on Tuesday by Judge McDougall in Toronto dismissing the application to compel a Justice of the Peace to endorse the warrant issued at Montreal for the arrest of Mr. Sheppard, of the News.

The London Daily News believes the Cabinet is divided on the question of meeting the views of the Unionists, and that unless the difference is arranged it may lead to the defeat of the Government in committee.

The annual session of Grand Divisions of Sons of Temperance was opened on Tuesday in Boston, with a large attendance of representatives, among them being Lieut.-Governor Sir Leonard Tilley, of New Brunswick.

Right now is the time to use a good Blood Purifying Medicine. Lose no time in getting a bottle of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters,. It will do you good. Sold by all Druggists,. 50.

Two prominent members of the Montreal police force have been suspended, pending an investigation into serious charges against them. It is probable the whole force will be reorganized, and that a new chief will be appointed.

The city of Port Huron is endeavoring to compel the Grand Trunk Railway to remove its elevator, warehouses and stockyards to that place from Point Edward, to give Americans the benefit of handling American products now enjoyed by Canadians.

Don't use any more poisonous purgatives such as pills, etc., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

M. Rouvier, the French Prime Minister, states that Gen. Boulanger was removed from his political surroundings because he was concerned in the illegal manifestations on the occasion of the recent election of the Deputy for the Department of the Seine.

WEATHER NOTES.—May said good by to us with a high temperature, June, as if nothing put out by such hot work, followed close, as if trying to outdo its twin brother. For five days during the month at 3 p. m. has the thermometer been at 92 degrees in the shade, while on most of the remainder it was between 80 and 90 degrees. Only once did it come as low as 72 degrees, leaving the mean temperature of the month at 62 13-30 degrees. It should be remembered this is only for sunrise and sunset, and that should I average 3 p. m., the three would make an exceedingly high temperature. Rain fell on 9 days to the depth of 1 inch and 91-100 of an inch, being mostly local showers, the heaviest, a thunder storm, being on the 21st, falling 92-100 of an inch. We had 7 foggy mornings, but no June frost, a very rare circumstance, no doubt the extreme heat counteracting the cold. The first head of timothy was seen on the 2nd, the first head of fall wheat on the 3rd, and the first head of barley on the 7th, with other crops duly bringing up the rear. The following are the different points from which the wind was blowing at sunrise during the month, namely: south-east, 9 days; west, 2 days: north-west, 3 days; south-west, 7 days; east, 2 days; south, 3 days; north-east, 3 days, and north, 1 day.

PORT HOPE.

CANOE CLUB.—The Times says a meeting was held on Monday evening to organize a canoe club. There are twenty-two canoes in town, and the canoeists will make a live club. The officers appointed were:—Commodore, G. M. Furby, Vice-Commodore, G. R. Salter, Sec.-Treas., James Evans. The club flag is a red burgee with a centre white square, the club totem, a dragon fly, in the centre of the square; the letters P. H. C. C. will be in the four corners. Another meeting will be held on Friday evening.

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

An Irishman's Bull.

We are surrounded by difficulties and dangers, said Pat, from the cradle to the grave, and the only wonder is that we ever live long enough after leaving the one to reach the other. The greatest danger lies in allowing the seeds of disease to be sown in our system. If you feel dull and drowsy, have frequent headaches, bad taste in mouth, coated tongue, poor appetite, you are suffering from a torpid liver. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if you would destroy those seeds and avoid reaping a harvest of suffering and death

The sheikhs and tribesmen who were captured by the expedition sent out to avenge Col. Stewart's murder in the Soudan in April, have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from seven to three years at hard labour and to be flogged.

UNFAIR DISCRIMINATION.

Free trade with one nation, which carries with it discrimination against all others, is of the left-handed kind; and if they should retaliate, as they probably would, the result would be the reverse of beneficial. This question of Commercial Union with the United States involves many considerations, and we shall make a great mistake if we look at it as a transaction standing alone. It involves our whole commercial and financial policy, as well as our present status in the Empire. We could no longer look to the Mother Country for favors if we put her, commercially, on a worse footing than a foreign country.—Monetary Times.

ICE CREAMS AND SODA WATER

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," etc.

In a second it was gone, and they were once more in darkness. But then by degrees the storm passed off and the moon began to shine, feebly indeed, for the sky was not clear washed of clouds, which still trailed along in the tracks of the tempest, sucked after it by its mighty draught. Still it was lighter, and the rain gradually thinned till at last it stopped. The storm had passed in majesty down the ways of the night, and there was no sound round them but the sound of rushing water.

"John," said Jess, presently, "can we do anything?"

"Nothing, dear!"

"Shall we escape, John?"

He hesitated. "It is in God's hands, dear. We are in great danger. If the cart upsets we shall be drowned. Can you swim?"

"No, John."

"If we can hang on here till daylight we may get ashore if those devils are not there to shoot us. I do not think that our chance is a good one."

"John, are you afraid to die?"

He hesitated. "I don't know, dear. I hope to meet it like a man."

"Tell me what you truly think. Is there any hope for us at all?"

Once more he paused, reflecting whether or not he should speak the truth. Finally he decided to do so.

"I can see none, Jess. If we are not drowned we are sure to be shot. They will wait about the bank till morning, and for their own sakes they will not dare to let us live."

He did not know that all that was left of two of them would indeed wait for many a long year, and that the third had fled aghast.

"Jess, dear," he went on, "it is no good to tell lies. Our lives may end any minute. Humanly speaking, they must end before the sun is up."

The words were awful enough—if the reader can by an effort of the imagination throw himself for a moment into the position of these two, he will, perhaps, understand how awful. It is a dreadful thing, when in the full flow of health and youth, to be suddenly placed face to face with the certainty of violent death and to know that in a few more minutes your course will have been run, and that you will have commenced to explore the future, which may prove to be even worse, because more enduring, than the life you are now quitting in agony. It is a dreadful thing, as any who have once stood in such a peril can testify, and Jess felt her heart sink within him at the thought—for death is very strong. But there is one thing stronger—a woman's perfect love. Against this death cannot prevail. And so it came to pass that now, as he fixed his cold gaze upon Jess' eyes, they answered him with a strange, unearthly light. She feared not death so that she might meet with her beloved. Death was her hope and opportunity. Here she had come, there she might have all—or sleep. The fetters had fallen from her, struck off by an overmastering hand. Her duty was satisfied, her trust was fulfilled and she was free—free to died with her beloved. Ah! her love was, indeed, a love deeper than the grave; and now it rose in all its strength, standing tiptoe upon the earth, ready, when dissolution had lent its wings, to soar to love's own star.

"You are sure, John?" she asked again.

"Yes, dear, yes. Why do you force me to repeat it? I can see no hope."

Her arms were round his neck, her soft curls rested on his cheek, and the breath from her lips played upon his face. Indeed, it was only by speaking into each other's ears that conversation was feasible, owing to the rushing sound of the waters.

"Because I have something to tell you which I cannot tell unless we are going to die. You know it, but I want to say it with my own lips before I die. I love you, John; I love you, I love you; and I am glad to die because I can die with you and go away with you."

He heard, and such was the power of her love, that his, which had been put out of mind in the terror of that hour, reawoke and took the color of her own. He, too, forgot the imminence of death in the warm presence of his down trodden passion. She was in his arms as he had taken her during the firing, and he bent his head to look at her. The moonlight played upon her pallid, quivering face, and showed that in her eyes which no man could look upon and turn away from. Once more—yes, even then—there came over him that feeling of utter surrender to the sweet mastery of her will that had possessed him in the sitting room of "The Palatial." But now, all earthly considerations having faded away, he no longer hesitated, but pressed his lips against hers and kissed her again and again. It was perhaps as wild and pathetic a love scene as ever the old moon above has looked upon. There they were, those two, experiencing the fullest and acutest joy that life has to offer in the shadow of death. Nay, death was present with them; for there, beneath their feet, half hidden by the water, was the stiffening corpse of the Zulu.

To and fro swung the cart in the rush of the swollen river, up and down beside them the carcasses of the horses rose and fell with the swell of the water, on whose surface the broken moonbeams played and quivered. Overhead was the blue, star sown depth through which they were waiting presently to pass, and to the right and left the long, broken outlines of the banks stretched away till at last they appeared to grow together in the gloom.

But they heeded none of these things; they remembered nothing except that they had found each other's hearts, and were happy with a wild joy it is not often given us to feel. The past was forgotten, the future was at hand, and between the one and the other was spanned a bridge of passion made perfect and sanctified by the approaching end. Beside was forgotten, all things were forgotten in that consuming fire.

Let those who would blame them pause a while. Why not? They had kept the faith. They had denied themselves and run straightly down the path of duty. But the compacts of life end with life. No man may bargain for the beyond. Even the marriage service shrinks from it. And now that hope had gone and life was at its extremest ebb, why should they not take their happiness before they passed to the land where, perchance, all things will be forgotten? So it seemed to them; if indeed they were any longer capable of reason.

He looked into her eyes and she laid her head upon his heart in that mute abandonment of worship which is sometimes to be met with in this world, and is redeemed from vulgar passion by an indefinable quality of its own. He looked into her eyes and was glad to have lived, ay, even to have reached this hour of death. And she, lost in the depths of her own nature, sobbed out her passion laden heart upon his breast, and called him her own, her own, her very own!

And so the long hours passed, till at last a new born freshness in the air told them that they were not far from dawn. The death they were waiting for had not yet come. It must now be very near at hand.

"John," she whispered in his ear, "do you think that they will shoot us?"

"Yes," he said, hoarsely; "they must for their own safety."

"I wish it were over," she said.

Suddenly she started back from his arms with a little cry, causing the cart to rock violently.

"I forgot," she said—"you can swim, though I cannot. Why cannot you swim to the bank and get off under cover of the darkness. It is not more than fifty yards, and the current is not so very swift!"

The idea of escaping without Jess had never occurred to him, and now that she suggested it, it struck him as so absurd that he actually broke into a ghost of a laugh.

"Don't talk nonsense, Jess," he said.

"Yes, yes, I will. Go! You must go! It does not matter about me now. I know you love me and I can die happy. I will wait for you. Oh, John! wherever I am, if I have any life and any remembrance, I will wait for you. Never forget that all your life, However far I may seem away, if I live at all, I shall be waiting for you. And now go; you shall go, I say! No, I will not be disobeyed. If you will not go I will throw myself into the water. Oh, the cart is turning over!"

"Hold on for God's sake!" shouted John. "The traces have broken."

He was right; the tough leather was at length worn through by the constant rubbing against the rock and the strain and swaying of the cart on the one side and the dead horses on the other. Round it spun, broadside on the current, and immediately began to heave over till at last the angle was so sharp that the dead body of poor Mouti slid out with a splash and vanished into the darkness. This relieved the cart, and it righted for a moment, but now no longer held up by the bodies of the horses, or by the sustaining power of the wind, it began to fill and sink, and at the same time to revolve round and round. John realized that it was all up, and that to stop in the cart would only mean certain death, because they would be held under water by the canvas tent. So with a devout aspiration for assistance he seized Jess round the waist with one arm and sprang off into the water. At that moment the cart filled and sank.

"Lie still, for Heaven's sake!" he shouted, as they rose to the surface.

In the dim light of the dawn, which was now creeping over the earth, he could make out the line of the left bank of the Vaal, the same from which they had started into the river on the previous night. It appeared to be about forty yards away, but the current was running quite six knots, and he realized that, burdened as he was, it would be quite impracticable for him to try and reach it. The only thing to do was to keep afloat. Luckily the water was warm and he was a strong swimmer. In a minute or so he made out that about fifty paces ahead some rocks jutted out twenty yards into the bed of the stream. Then, catching Jess by the hair with his left hand, he made his effort, and a desperate one it was. The broken water boiled furiously round the rocks. Presently he was in it, and, better still, his feet touched the ground. Next second he was swept off them and rolled over and over at the bottom of the river, getting sadly knocked about against the bowlders. Somehow he struggled to his legs, still retaining his hold of Jess. Twice he fell, and twice he struggled up again. One more effort—so. The water was only up to his thighs now, and he was obliged to half carry his companion. As he lifted her he felt a deadly sickness come over him, but still he struggled on like a man, till at last they both fell of a heap upon a big flat rock, and for a while he remembered no more.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Full Cargo to Japan.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 12.—The steamship Parthia sailed at 3 p. m. yesterday for Yokohama with eleven first class and one intermediate passenger. She took a full cargo of coal and merchandise and will call at Victoria to receive nine passengers and a number of Chinese.

HIGHER THAN NEW YORK.

Last week John Prain, salesman of the Cotswold cheese factory, sold 400 boxes of June make cheese at 9 3-16 cents per pound, and at the same time James Connell, salesman of the Harriston factory, sold 350 boxes at the same price.—Guelph Mercury (Commercial Unionist.)

THE GRIT PROMISED LAND.

Just think of it! a respectable young woman arrested as a street walker in London by an over zealous policeman, and the affair has created such a commotion that parliament has been obliged to take the matter up, with the probability that the Home Secretary will be compelled to resign. And this in a limited monarchy. But in this free republic hundreds of respectable women have been unjustly arrested under precisely similar circumstances, and they have not been able to secure even a reprimand for the officers who took them into custody.—Jersey City Argus.

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the two most valuable specifics in their purest form. D. D. D. McDonald, Petitcodiac, N.B., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for Diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Fire Brigade Excursion.

The Annual Excursion of the Peterborough Fire Brigade will take place about the 1st of August. Grimsby Park is the place selected. Look out for further information in future locals. ds

The Proceeds.

The proceeds of the Salvation Army dive amounted to over $150. This amount will be applied to the building fund in connection with the new barracks.

The People.

On July 12th between 4,500 and 5,000 people arrived in town over the Grand Trunk and branch lines, and about 2,000 over the Canadian Pacific Railway. In coming in and going away not one accident happned.

A Success.

The Listemann-Kellog concert was a financial success the first concert held here of which the same can be said for a long time. It is due to the efforts of Messrs. K. G. Loch and Geo. Stevenson that it was managed so well.

SEE KIDD'S stock of boots and shoes Prices away, away down.

The Right Spirit.

Mr. Daly, proprietor of the Grand Central Hotel, has intimated to the Chairman of the Oddfellows' Reception and Hotel Committee that it is his intention to decorate and illuminate the Grand Central Hotel so as to surpass anything of the kind previously seen in Peterborough, on the occasion of the demonstration in honor of the Oddfellows' Grand Lodge in August.

Worthy of Note.

Messrs. Elliott & Tierney have secured the A. C. A. Camp Store. Visitors to this delightful outing need hardly be reminded that this valuable acquisition to the material comforts of camp life could not possibly be in better hands. Peterborough prices will be the rule. Mr. Elliott will be the dispenser, and this is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be en regle. 6d9

Booming.

Communications have been received at the Central Bridge Works from Mr. W. Featherstone, Clerk of the Township of Logan, Ont., accepting Mr. Law's tender for the building of a bridge there, and from Mr. J. D. Bowman, Clerk of Preston, accepting Mr. Law's tender for the erection of a bridge over the Speed at Preston. The big bridge for Banff, N. W. T., is ready at the works for shipment and will be sent off in a few days. Mr. Law is at present in London, Ont., on business.

Sunday School Picnic.

The Charlotte Street Sunday School held its annual picnic at the point opposite Lakefield on Wednesday. The teachers, parents and children had dinner and tea at the point. Games were held in the afternoon and the steamer Fairy, chartered for the day, gave the girls and boys sails on the river. The only mishap occurring was the wetting which Master Bertie Stock got at the wharf. He was successfully fished out, however, before any harm was done.

The Chautauqua of Canada.

The Fire Brigade have chosen a beautiful place for the objective point of their annual excursion, namely Grimsby Park, the Chautauqua of Canada. Grimsby Park, comprising 100 acres, is one of the most beautiful and healthful spots in Canada, on the west shore of Lake Ontario, midway between Hamilton and Niagara Falls. It is pleasantly cool by day and brilliantly lighted by electricity at night. The village of Grimsby close by the Park is a picturesque spot, nestling at the foot of the mountain, and within full view of Lake Ontario. This Chautauqua has marked out a line for itself in recreation, in study and in securing and developing religious life and work. No doubt the excursion will be largely patronized.

LISTEMANN-KELLOGG CONCERT.

A Large and Fashionable Audience—A Decided Success.

The grand evening concert given by the Listemann-Kellogg Concert Company, under the auspices of the Lansdowne Rowing Club, on Wednesday evening, was a decided success. Before noon on Wednesday all the reserved seats were disposed of and a large number of back seats had to be placed in the reserved list.

The concert commenced at 8.45 o'clock, the following programme being presented:—

Duet, Lilly of Killarney.....Benedict
Geo N Holt and G B Ronconi.
Violin solo, Concerto .....Bazzini
Bernhard Listemann.
Celebrated Echo Song, (with flute obligato).....

Fanny Kellogg.
Good Night Quartette, from Martha .....
Fanny Kellogg, Abby Clark Ford, Geo N Holt and G B Ronconi.

Listemann was grand. The concerto brought out many of his best qualities demanding, as it did, great skill of varied character. Now a tour de force of rapid execution is exhibited, which melts into a sweet and soulful air, embellished with a fervor of expression which Listemann knows well how to apply. His double notes were managed with much finesse, the full power of the violin being made to fade away in their vibrations till scarcely audible and vice versa with the utmost ease. To a decided encore he responded with St. Patrick's Day with variations, which was also enthusiastically received. To number 9 he was called out three times to bow, and finally was compelled to respond with another exquisite solo. Apart from being a musician of the highest order Listemann has a stage appearance which, to amateur violinists, is alone worth the admission fee to see. He may always rely upon a hearty reception in Peterborough.

Mr. G. B. Ronconi, the flute virtuoso, won laurels in his interpretation of No. 5. As a flute soloist it would be hard to find his equal. Mr. Ronconi also showed himself possessed of a very fine baritone. He received long and loud applause at the finishing of "Madaminna."

Miss Fanny Kellogg's soprano, rich and of immense power, appeared to best advantage in No. 7, a duet, "By thee with Bliss," from Hadyn's creation, which she sung with Mr. Ronconi. This was substituted for the duet named on the programme. She was encored after singing the "Echo Song," a very pretty composition, and she made a very favourable impression in her rendition of "Within a Mile of Edinboro Town."

Miss Abby Clark Ford, contralto, contributed one number, and and was encored.

It is somewhat strange that so important a part as the tenor should have devolved upon a gentleman of the capacity of Mr. Holt. He is certainly unequal to the task.

The concert, taken altogether, however, was an unmistakable success, and it must have been pleasing alike to Mr. Max Bachert, the manager, and the Lansdowne Rowing Club. The enterprise of the latter in bringing the company to town will be appreciated if they again cater in this way.

CHINESE MISSIONS.

Plenty of Missionaries—Means Wanted to Support Them.

A meeting was held in St. Paul's Church on Wednesday evening in the interests of the missionary cause. The meeting was addressed by Mr. J. F. Smith, late of New York, and Mr. J. H. Buchanan, B. A., of Kingston.

The meeting was opened with Scripture reading by the Rev. Mr. Torrance and prayer by the Rev. Mr. Bennett.

Mr. SMITH was the first speaker. He explained that it was the intention of the Presbyterian Church to establish a missionary station in the Province of Honan, Northern China, a Province having a population of 20,000,000, in which there is as yet no missionary station. Formerly it was the case that there was abundance of means and not enough missionaries. Now it the opposite, and he appeared before the congregation of St. Paul's to appeal to them to support this cause. Last year the Queen's College students had formed a Missionary Association and the 99 members had raised $650 towards sending a missionary out to this province. He spoke of the great want of medical skill in this province, there being only one medical practitioner to every 5,000,000. He concluded with an earnest appeal for aid.

Mr. Buchanan exhibited a chart of the world showing what proportion of the world's population was Christian and what not Christian. He spoke of the readiness of young men to go forward in the missionary work if they could only be maintained. Since Mr. Moody came back from the east over 2,000 young men in the United States had volunteered for the work.

The meeting closed with singing "From Greenland's Icy Mountains." A liberal collection was taken up.

REMNANTS of Prints and Muslins must all be cleared out this week at Turnbull's. For Genuine Bargains call at TURNBULL'S.

BELLEVILLE BALL PLAYERS.

The Home Nine Defeated by a Score of 24 to 2.

On Wednesday afternoon a baseball match was played in the P. A. A. A. grounds between teams representing Peterborough and Belleville. The glory the cricketers won the day previous by their splendid victory over Toronto was diluted by the base ball club.

Farrell took the box at about half-past three o'clock. Dr. Brennan hit the ball for one base and got to second. Landy came next and sent a fly to centre field. Brennan ran off his base and the ball was caught putting both men out. Fitzgerald by neat play got around as far as third, but on running to the plate was given out by the umpire.

The Belleville half of the innings was almost a precise counterpart of the first half. Farrell was on second base and ran when Moore caught Ryan out. Dyson, however, got around before Jones was put out at first base.

At the opening of the second innings Metheral went to base on balls. Fligg made a base hit and Arch. Moore followed with a three bagger. He was left on third, however, the side being retired before he had a chance to get in.

Belleville went in and scored four, Kaneen Lewis, Sholes and Flemming all getting around.

Thus far the play had been pretty good on both sides, but after this the home nine fell all apart and didn't get together again during the game. The score by innings will show the record.

The score is as follows:—

POLICE COURT.

THREE DRUNKS.

WEDNESDAY, July 13.—Three men appeared in the Court who had become too greatly excited over the 12th celebration and were charged with being drunk. John Willoughby and Frank Johnston, of Dummer, who were arrested by P. C. Pigeon, were each fined $2, and George Trotter, of Fraserville, who had been run in by Acting-Chief Adams, was allowed three days in which to hand in $2.

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

Fred. Facteau was charged by Mrs. Evans with having used abusive language towars her on Monday. He was fined $10 or twenty days in gaol.

The Owner.

The fat wallet which was found in Croft's Hotel on Wednesday was restored to its owner, Mr. J. H. Humphries, of Westwood, to-day. Mr. Humphries is very thankful at having again got his money, some $500. He thinks Mr. Croft is the most honest host in the country.

IMPORTANT!

At the time of selling our stock of Dry Goods to Sheehy & Co., we had fully determined to give up that particular branch of our business, but, as previously announced, did not do so, for various reasons. THE HAWAIIAN REVOLUTION.

An Extraordinary and Contradictory State of Affairs.

NEW YORK, July 14.—A despatch to the Herald, dated Honolulu, July 5, says: "The condition of affairs here is most extraordinary and contradictory. No one knows what an hour may bring forth or whether the action of Thursday, June 20, will end in a guffaw or civil war. The town may be in the hands of the people, but the King is certainly king still, though he may not be to-morrow. While the Thursday demonstration was in progress the King sent a letter to the meeting asserting his willingness to form a new ministry and accede to any reforms demanded under the constitution and laws of the kingdom. The ministry formed by Mr. Green he immediately accepted, and even when Mr. Gibson and Mr. Hayselden were arrested he made no sign. The request that he shall not in future, either directly or indirectly, interfere with the election of representatives or unduly influence legislation, he declared need not have been made, as it is a fault he has never been guilty of. The demand to which he objects is that for the restitution of $71,000 said to have been paid him."

The Herald correspondent had an interview with King Kalakua. The King said that he would not be coerced into signing the new constitution. He will not sign away his people's right under duress. He will sign the document if so advised by his Privy Council, but in that or any event he will consider the forced constitution illegal. As to personal violence, the King said he did not fear it, but such a thing was possible. He said that he would appeal to the representatives of the foreign powers for protection, and would ask them to guarantee his personal safety.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

Outspoken Criticisms of the Measure from Lord Randolph Churchill.

LONDON, July 14.—In the House of Commons this evening Lord Randolph Churchill, resuming the debate on the Land Bill, objected to Mr. Bannerman's amendment that the bill be rejected only as raising a false issue. There was a general agreement, he said, on the point that a bill was absolutely necessary to afford relief to the Irish tenantry. It was a great mistake to impute a want of good faith to the Government in the proposals of the bill. The government had been forced to offer a temporary land measure before the session closed, for no more odious duty could devolve upon the Irish Government than to administer the Crimes Act unaccompanied by a measure which would satisfy the tenantry. [Cries of "Hear, hear!"] Proceeding to examine the clauses of the bill, he supported Mr. Dillon's criticisms on the restrictions of the leaseholders' clause, which he hoped the Government would amend. He did not see that the tenantry would derive any benefit from the clause dealing with evictions. [Parnellite cheers.] He would fear to entrust Irish agents to be advisors of the landlords with the powers conferred on them under that clause. [Cries of "Oh!" from the Conservative benches and cheers.] What would have been the state of Ireland if this clause had been in operation last winter? He did not doubt that from one-quarter to one-half of the tenantry would have been in a state of tumult and disorder appalling to contemplate. It is not within the limit of physical possibilities to deal with the clause this season. The bill must be lightened by throwing it over.

The bankruptcy clauses were equally objectionable, inasmuch as they would tend to lower the moral tone of the tenantry, besides producing an immeasurable mass of litigation. The Government, in view of the large number of tenants who it was expected would be forced into bankruptcy, seemed to be trying to build up a system of national credit on a widespread foundation of national insolvency. If the Government, with the Irish members, would agree to deal with arrears and a revision of judicial rents instead of the bankruptcy clauses, the bill would be deprived of [illegible] and could pass.

After further debate the amendment was then negatived and the bill read a second time without division.

It was decided to consider the bill in committee on Thursday next.

TRANSCONTINENTAL ROUTES.

Waking up a Rival—The Canadian Route Astonishing th Southern Roads.

MONTREAL, July 13.—The Star says:—It appears that the Union Pacific Railway is organizing a transcontinental train to be known as the Asiatic express which will run weekly or fortnightly. This will be the American section of a through route from Asiatic to European points. The trip across the continent is to be made, so it is said, in one hundred hours, so that Yokohama can be reached from London in less than a month. The putting on of this train will be certainly due to the competition of the Canadian Pacific, which has already secured a largo portion of the passenger as well as the freight traffic. The Canadian Pacific now books and has since the opening of the steamships line booked passengers from any Asiatic point to any point in Europe, giving a through coupon ticket. And this travel is increasing rapidly. A special steamer had to be put on for a trip between the regularly advertised trips in order to meet the increased business. The Canadian Pacific sells tickets to almost every point on the globe, so that the Union Pacific and other American lines are obliged to follow suit. One great advantage possessed by the C.P.R. is that its land route is about three hundred miles shorter. The distances are as follows via C.P.R.: Quebec to Vancouver, 3,052 miles; Vancouver to Yokohama, 4,234 miles; and Quebec to Liverpool, 2,660 miles, making a total mileage from Yokohama to Liverpool via Canada of 9,946 miles. By the Union Pacific routes the distances are as follows:—Liverpool to New York, 3,130 miles; New York to San Francisco, 3,270 miles; San Francisco to Yokohama, 4,750 miles, thus totalling 11,151 miles from Liverpool to Yokohama via New York and San Francisco. This is 1,205 miles in favour of the Canadian route.

SIR GEORGE OTTO TREVELYAN.

Address to the Electors of the Bridgetown Division of Glasgow.

LONDON, July 14.—Sir George Otto Trevelyan has issued an election address to the electors of the Bridgetown division of Glasgow. He says:—"From the first I disapproved of Liberals supporting Conservatives against Liberals. No word of mine can be quoted in which I favored this course, the adoption of which proves to every unprejudiced man that the policy of the dissidents aims not at a settlement of the Irish question by amending the bills presented in 1886, but at the suppression of the Liberal party. I cannot partake of that policy. The dissident leaders have not accepted Mr. Gladstone's offer, and refuse to be reconciled to the Liberal party, preferring to give their support to the Conservatives. I do not believe they can carry with them the great mass of the Liberals who could not accept home rule as presented in 1886."

Suspicious Death.

WINNIPEG, July 14.—The body of a man, supposed to be William Swanston, a woodpiler for the Canadian Pacific Railway at Eldon, was found yesterday at Cascade Creek, two miles east of Banff. He was lying face downward and has the appearance of foul play, his head being badly cut and his face disfigured. A post mortem will be held to-morrow.

CRUSADE AGAINST RUSSIA.

LONDON, July 14.—The Post to-day continues the crusade against Russian securities, and points out the fact that even Russia-loving France avoids them.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and reinforcing the Blood pure and cool. Sold by all Druggists.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT NORTHFIELD.

To the Editor of the Review.

SIR,—The interest in Moody's summer gathering continues unabated, and fresh men are constantly coming. Dr. Jos. Cook has gone, after having given us a number of short addresses, in most of which (though an Andover man himself), he strongly opposed the teaching of a future probation. On one occasion he said, "I was educated at the Andover that was, not at the Andover that is." One of his strongest utterances was, "I believe as thoroughly as I exist that unless a soul is delivered from sin and the love of it, that soul drops into perdition." He believes that we are living in tremendous times, and says that both Christianity and infidelity are now preparing for a final assault on the whole world.

Not much has been said of Mr. Moody himself in these letters, but it has not been because his influence is not felt. He takes the lead of every meeting himself, though doing little speaking. His natural leadership comes out at every point. At six o'clock every morning he meets all who wish to get some Bible "nuggets" in a little glen on the grounds, and these meetings are not the least profitable of the series.

Rev. Dr. Townsend, of Boston, gave his last and best address on Tuesday morning. His subject was "Primitive Orthodoxy." It would stablish a good many who are now unsettled to read his emphatic denial of the need of re-stating the old creeds of Christendom. He showed the futility of such re-statements from those of Origen and Gregory down to those of Ballon and Parker, and proved that under loose theological teaching vice became rampant, and the distinction between the church and the world well-nigh vanished. People soon tired of a creedless and corrupted church, and when men like Wesley and Whitfield were raised up, there was widespread revival of primitive teaching and practice. And in the present day men will throng as nowhere else to those places where the Gospel is preached in a plain honest way. If, as he to his audience, "in either the home or the foreign field you yield to the temptation to feed men upon anything except [illegible] The Gospel of Christ—as interpreted [illegible]

Meeting.

Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, who has made himself very popular here, gave an address the other day on God's providential plan in regard to missions. Dr. Pierson is well qualified to speak on this subject, being the author, as Jos. Cook said, of a Classic on Missions. His two leading thoughts were that the whole world is now open to the Gospel and demanding it, and that the young men of the day are obeying the call as never before. On Thursday evening last we had our first lecture from Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, who is widely known as a publisher of Christian literature, especially of anti-infidel literature. His subject was "The Mistakes of Moses," and during his treatment of it the audience was kept in roars of laughter by wit, humor and sarcasm, with which the lecture was crowded. As it can be secured for a few cents from any bookseller, I will not occupy space in giving any extracts.

Prof. Drummond is still here and on Saturday gave an address on "Doubt," treating the subject quite differently from the way in which it is generally considered. We are forced to raise the subject. He said: Every day of our lives we meet men that doubt. Hence it is a matter of great practical importance that we should know how to deal with those men wisely. Upon the whole the honest doubters are the best men in the country. As to the origin of doubt, he said, 1st, that we are born questioners. Doubt is an inevitable thing, not to be crushed. It is a part of man as God made him. 2nd. The world is a sphinx, an unfathomable mystery. 3rd. The instrument with which we attempt to investigate truth is impaired. It is feeble and inadequate to its tremendous task. 4th. All religious truths are doubtable. There is no absolute proof for any of them. This brief account of the origin of doubt teaches us great intellectual humility and sympathy with those who venture to find a path through the sea of truth for themselves. Let us pity them and take them by the hand and spend thought over them in trying to lead them to the true light and life. The church's treatment of in the past has been very simple, "There is a heretic, burn him." We have got past that physically, but have we got past it morally. The modern church says of the men skeptically inclined, not "burn him," but "brand him." Contrast Christ's treatment of doubt. He never failed to distinguish between doubt and unbelief. Doubt is can't believe, unbelief is, won't believe. Christ destroyed doubt by making plain; He gave a doubter facts. He then presented the positive aggressive methods of dealing with doubt, which were admirable, but which I must omit.

On Friday evening short addresses on "Christian Work" were given by Mr. Moody, W. M. Oatts, Secretary of Glasgow Y. M. C. A.; Geo. A. Hall, New York State Secretary of Y. M. C. A.; L. D. Wishard, College International Sec., Y. M. C. A., and Rev. Dr. Pierson.

On Saturday morning H. L. Hastings, of Boston, gave another admirable lecture, this time on the "Inspiration of the Bible." Following him Dr. Pierson gave his last address as he had to return home. His departure was very much regretted.

No meetings were held after noon on Saturday, as Mr. Moody wanted everyone to be fresh for Sunday. A well-arranged field day of sports took place in the afternoon. The most exciting feature was a tug-of-war between 15 New Englanders and 15 subjects of Old England (nearly all Canadians). The New Englanders were captained by Mr. Moody, and the Old Englanders by Prof. Drummond. Although nearly all the British subjects had to be put on the team, as there were not many to choose from, the teams were almost evenly matched, and the Yankees won by very little. When darkness came on the fellows gathered togther and sang college songs and closed the evening by going to Mr. Moody's house and serenading Prof. Drummond.

Yesterday (Sunday) was the best day yet, but I must leave an account of it for another letter. The school will close on Tuesday next, 19th July.

I wish there was more space in your paper and more time at my disposal to give a more extended account of this gathering, the like of which, as Dr. Pierson said the other day, "has not been seen since the time of Adam."

THE PRANZINI MURDER TRIAL.

PARIS, July 14.—In the trial of Pranzini, the murderer of Madame Regnault, her maid and the latter's child, yesterday, no extenuating circumstances were shown. The prisoner declared that he was innocent, and kept a bold face to the end. It is expected he will appeal, but the case against him is terribly strong. The scene in the court room at the close of the trial was very indecorous, many ladies jumping on benches to catch a glimpse of the prisoner. He was sentenced to death.

THE QUEEN'S DONATION.

LONDON, July 14.—The Queen has donated £200 to the fund for the relief of distressed clergymen.

THE QUEEN AT HATFIELD.

LONDON, July 14.—The Queen appeared to be quite feeble and much depressed in spirits while at Lord Salisbury's garden party at Hatfield, yesterday. She sat almost alone on the terrace for nearly an hour, and afterwards took a short promenade, leaning heavily upon a walking stick. Subsequently she conversed at some length with the Count of Paris.

THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 14.—The Unionists will abstain from voting on the bankruptcy clauses of the Land bill if they are not abandoned. In the face of the threatened prolonged opposition to the bill, many of the Conservatives are urging the Government to be content to pass the leaseholders' clause, and to leave the remainder of the bill over to the next session.

DISASTROUS EXPLOSION.

ROME, July 14.—Details of the explosion of the gunpowder magazine at Massowah on July 11 show that ten Italian soldiers were killed and seventy injured, and that camp property worth $200,000 was destroyed.

DEATH OF KRUPP.

BERLIN, July 14.—Frederick Krupp, the well-known German metal founder and gigantic steel gun manufacturer, died to-day in his villa near Essen, Phenish Prussia. Herr Krupp was born at Essen in 1812.

FALL OF THE BASTILE.

The Anniversary Celebration More Orderly Than Was Expected.

PARIS, July 14.—Thus far the fall of the Bastile has been commemorated with quiet and decorum. A demonstration was made at the statue of Stratsburg this morning, but it was entirely of a peaceful nature. Members of the Patriotic League and other associations, with banners and trumpeters, marched passed the statue and deposited upon it colossal memorial crowns. As this was done there were a few cries from the procession of "Viv la France," "Vive la Republique," and "Vive Boulanger," but there were no attempts at disorder.

President Grevy, accompanied by all the members of the Ministry, left the palace at 8.30 o'clock this afternoon to attend the review of the troops. An escort of cuirassiers preceded and followed the President's carriage. The people along the road greeted the President with cries of "Vive Grevy."

The party were greeted with some isolated cries of "Vive Boulanger," and "resign" and a few hisses on their arrival at Longchamps to witness the review this afternoon, but cries of "Vive La Republique" dominated and the people seemed generally disposed to be friendly.

The review of the troops passed off without incident. It was witnessed by an immense but orderly crowd which cheered the troops heartily. The march past began at 4.10 o'clock and was finished at 5.50. The President and Cabinet then returned to Paris.

The populace this evening is calm and all fears of disorder have vanished.

Gen. Boulanger sprained his foot and was unable to be present at the review at Clermont Ferrand to-day. The fete was celebrated throughout France without disorder.

UNRULY INDIANS.

Said to be Firing Timber Limits to Burn Out the Spirits.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 14.—Fully a third of the band of Stonies, at Wolf Creek, near Edmonton, have died since last autumn, probably from the effects of exposure too quickly following an attack of measles. They are said to be very troublesome now, and are firing the timber limits near the mountains in order, as they say, to kill the spirits that are killing them. They are also said to be very unruly in their behaviour towards the Indian department officials.

Chief Prince says all the troubles among the Indians at the annual treaty payment at St. Peter's reserve arose from two causes, viz., first: The rations being placed on the ground, and secondly, Inspector McCall using unnecessarily strong talk to the chief and council.

NORWOOD.

THE R. C. PICNIC.—The picnic held here on Thursday last under the auspices of the R. C. Church was a grand success in every particular. The weather was fine, the attendance large, and, as the poster announcing the event said, the occasion was really "a day of real enjoyment." Everything went off "like clockwork," and at the close of the day's proceedings a better satisfied crowd it would be hard to find. The dancing platform was the centre of attraction and the "light fantastic" was tripped from early morn until late at night, the harmonic stimulus being supplied by Prof. Doucet's orchestra, Peterborough, which, by the way, is a musical institution of no mean ability. In different parts of the beautiful grove refreshment stands were located and presided over by the ladies of the church. These were a source of considerable revenue, the alluring smiles of the fair ones being the means of adding many a dollar to the grand total. The Rev. J. Quirk, pastor of the congregation, was present and kept a paternal eye over the proceedings. About 3 o'clock the Caledonian games were commenced. Each event was keenly contested and considerable enthusiasm was manifested by the spectators.—Register.

THE PRICE OF COAL.

THE Kingston Whig in reference to our expression of regret that by the repeal of the duty on anthracite coal, a present of half a million dollars should have been made to the Pennsylvania coal ring without any benefit to the Canadian consumer, asks:—"Is the REVIEW then satisfied that our people paid the coal duty."

We have always been certain, and have always expressed the opinion that our people did not pay the coal duty but that the Pennsylvania coal ring did pay it. We formed that opinion, not on theory but on facts and figures, which showed that a special price was made for Canada at a sufficient reduction to cover the duty, which was paid by the coal owners not by the Canadian consumers.

We ventured to predict, amid the jeers of Reform journals, including the Whig, that the Pennsylvania coal ring, when the duty was repealed, would raise their prices for Canada and pocket the half million dollars by ceasing to allow it to our importers. The event has proved us correct. At Montreal, Ottawa and other places they are raging because they find that the price of coal instead of being lowered by the amount of the duty has remained as high as before. They relied upon freetrade theory instead of upon facts, and were of course disappointed.

As to the Whig's assertion that "we must use the American anthracite coal at any price and without regard to the tariffs," it is altogether erroneous. It was because the Pennsylvania coal ring knew that we could and would use Nova Scotia bituminous coal and coke in place of anthracite, if a special inducement was not given to use the anthracite, that these monopolists paid the duty rather than leave the field to the Nova Scotians. After supplying their home market at their own monopoly prices, they could obtain a smaller but sufficient profit in Ontario, by a reduction to counterbalance the duty, because the dearer freight from Nova Scotia prevented competition when the protective duty was thus met. The duty did not give our market to the Nova Scotians except to a small extent, but it had the alternative advantage of forcing the Pennsylvania ring to contribute half a million to the Dominion treasury. Therefore we are still of the opinion that it was a mistake to repeal the duty. We are not likely to be shaken in that opinion so long as facts and figures shew us to be right, as they do at present.

THE enunciation of a dangerous doctrine should be met with a timely protest, lest the mischievous idea should be allowed to spread. In an article on the relations of the Provinces to the Dominion of Canada, the Toronto Globe calmly observes that "They" (the Provinces) "would not consent to remain in Confederation, were," &c. Now, this is precisely the doctrine that was held by the Southern States of the Union, and that the for-a-short-time Confederate States endeavoured to put in practice because they objected to the nation interfering with their peculiar institutions. We all know the lamentable consequences and the final result. No country, unless it were at its last gasp, could submit to suicide by dismemberment. In a country like ours with representative institutions, the people rule and any portion of them, if dissatisfied with the decisions of the majority, should endeavour to effect a change by argument, not violence. The Globe is to be condemned for lightly suggesting ideas that might, if adopted, cause similar suffering in Canada to that through which the United States had to pass before such treasonable advisers were silenced.

THE Ottawa Journal has the following editorial remark:—

"It is rather rich to hear that a Montreal bank president proposes to deduct the Quebec tax on commercial companies "from the dividends." Where the deuce would he deduct it from? The bank's capital? Or from the deposits in the bank? Every charge on any kind of business is bound to shorten the profits—when there are any."

The Journal overlooks another alternative. The bank president could deduct it from the amounts he gives the customers bringing notes for discount, who would thus pay higher interest. One bank president could not do so, or his institution would lose business, but they could all agree to do this so long as the tax is exacted. In this way, just as if it were collected from the shareholders, the import would appear to be indirect taxation in effect, whatever it may be in the eye of the law.

THE MARKET REPORTS

Cheese.

Messrs. Blackburn & Parkinson, Liverpool, write as follows:—

"During the past few days an advance has taken place in our market, which we think is entirely unwarranted. The season is at least from two to three weeks later than usual, through the cold in the spring, and it is quite evident that the make will be large, as indications all point in that direction, and in America they have had good grass to present date. In our opinion it is a mistake to raise the price, seeing that the great bulk of the goods is yet to be consumed, and to induce consumption must be sold at reasonable prices. The July goods will be marketed fresh and green—supply will exceed demand—and as a consequence will cause prices to have a downward tendency. At the moment the market in New York is in the hands of speculators, and there is every probability they will find themselves with too many developing cheese on hand shortly."

Live Stock.

From the following, which is taken from the Liverpool correspondence of the Montreal Gazette, it appears that the live stock trade in England is in a very bad state:—

"From London the accounts are simply terrible, the wholesale meat men being unable to move off one-tenth of the stuff sent up. Locally, the finish up was as bad as possible, waggon loads of beef being carted off to Bell's 'refrig.' From the provincial markets reports are much the same, and how the stock is to be moved no one can tell. The condition of trade is simply indescribable—paralyzed, glutted, rotten, or any other adjective available, hardly conveying more than a mere suggestion of what it is like. I have before spoken of our salesmen being at their wits end; but, as a matter of fact, they are now past that, and beginning over again. At no time has the Canadian cattle trade been so completely "flummixed." Thus early in the season, and it is all the more galling to those engaged in shipping who had speculated on having nothing but good markets right through till the middle of July."

MOWAT'S TWO MEASURES.

When Registrar Waller of Carleton died, the Ontario Government declined to appoint his son to succeed him, one of the reasons advanced for refusing to accede to the popular wish that way being that such appointments should not run in families. Now, the Ontario Government has appointed the son of the late Sheriff Paxton, of Ontario County, to the position left vacant by his father's death.—Ottawa Journal (Indep).

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

When he came to himself again it was to find Jess, who had recovered sooner than he had, standing over him and chafing his hands. Indeed, as the sun was up, he guessed that he must have lost his senses for some time. He rose with some difficulty and shook himself. Except for some bruises he was sound enough.

"Are you hurt?" he asked of Jess, who, pale and faint and bruised, her hat gone, her dress torn by bullets and the rocks, and, dripping water at every step, looked an exceedingly forlorn object.

"No," she said, feebly; "not very much."

He sat down on the rock in the sun, for they were both shivering with cold. "What is to be done?" he asked.

"Die," she said, fiercely; "I meant to die—why did you not let me die? Ours is a position that only death can set straight."

"Don't be alarmed," he said, "your desire will soon be gratified; those murdering villains will hunt us up presently."

The bed and banks of the river were clothed with thin layers of mist, but as the sun gathered power these lifted. The spot where they had gone ashore was about 300 yards below that where the two Boers and their horses had been destroyed by the lightning on the previous night. Seeing the mist lift, John insisted upon Jess crouching with him behind a rock, so that they could look up and down the river without being seen themselves. Presently he made out the forms of two horses grazing about 200 yards away.

"Ah," he said, "I thought so; the devils have off saddled there. Thank heaven, I have still got my revolver and the cartridges are water tight. I mean to sell our lives as dearly as I can."

"Why, John," cried Jess, following the line of his outstretched hand, "those are not the Boers' horses; they are our two leaders that broke loose in the water. Look, their collars are still on."

"By Jove! so they are. Now, if only we can catch them without being caught ourselves, we have a chance of getting out of this."

"Well, there is no cover about, and I can't see any signs of Boers. They must have been sure of having killed us and gone away."

John looked round, and for the first time a sense of hope began to creep into his heart. Perhaps they would survive, after all.

"Let's go up and see. It is no good stopping here; we must get some food somewhere. I feel as weak as a cat."

She rose without a word, and, taking his hand, they advanced together along the bank. The [illegible] accustomed to [illegible] and [illegible] as something white that had stuck in some reeds. It was the basket of food which had been given to them by the innkeeper's wife at Heidelberg. It had been washed out of the cart, and, as the lid was fastened, nothing had been lost out of it. He undid it. There was the bottle of three star brandy untouched, also most of the eggs, meat and bread, which last was, of course, sodden and worthless. It did not take long to get the cork out, and then John filled a broken wineglass, there was in the basket half full of water and half of brandy, and made Jess drink it, with the result that she began to look a little less like a corpse. Next he repeated the process twice on his own account, and instantly felt as though new life was flowing into him. Then they went cautiously on.

The horses allowed them to catch them without trouble, and did not appear to be any the worse for their adventure, though the flank of one was grazed by a bullet.

"There is a tree there where the bank shelves over; we had better tie the horses up, dress and get some breakfast," said John, almost cheerfully; and accordingly they proceeded thither. Suddenly John, who was ahead, started back with an exclamation of fear, and the horse began to snort, for there, stark and stiff in death, and already swollen and discolored by decomposition—as is sometimes the case with people killed by lightning—the rifles in their hands twisted and fused, their clothes cut and blown from the bodies by the explosion of the cartridges in their bandoliers—lay the two Boers themselves. It was a terrifying sight, and, taken in conjunction with their own remarkable escape, one to make the most careless and skeptical reflect.

"And yet there are people who say that there is no such things as a God and no punishment for wickedness," said John aloud.

CHAPTER XXV.

MEANWHILE.

John, it will be remembered, left Moolfontein for Pretoria toward the end of December and with him went all the life and light of the place.

"Dear me, Bessie," said old Silas Croft on the evening after he had started, "the place seems very dull without John," a remark in which Bessie, who was secretly weeping in the corner, heartily concurred.

Then, a few days afterward, came the news of the investment of Pretoria, but no news of John. They ascertained that he had passed Standerton in safety, but beyond that nothing could be heard of him. Day after day passed, but no news, and at last, one evening, Bessie broke out in a passion of hysterical tears.

"What did you send him for?" she asked of her uncle. "It was ridiculous—I knew it was ridiculous. He could not help Jess or get her back; the most that could happen was that they both would be shut up together. And now he is dead—I know that those Boers have shot him—and it is all your fault! And if he is dead I will never speak to you again."

The old man retreated, somewhat dismayed at this outburst, which was not at all in Bessie's style.

"Ah, well," he said to himself, "that is the way of women; they turn into tigers about a man!"

There may have been truth in this reflection, but a tiger is not a pleasant domestic pet, as poor Silas found out during the next two months. The more Bessie thought about the matter the more incensed she grew at his having sent her lover away. Indeed, in a little while she quite forgot that she had herself acquiesced in his going. In short, her temper completely gave way under the strain, that at last her uncle scarcely dared to mention John's name.

JOHN THE BAPTIST.

EXPLANATORY NOTES BY REV. R. S. M'ARTHUR, D. D.

Lesson III of the International Series (Third Quarter), for Sunday, July 17. Text of the Lesson, Matthew iii, 1-12. Golden Text, Matthew iii, 8.

Matthew, still adhering to his design of showing the harmony between the facts of Christ's life and the Old Testament prophecies regarding his character and mission, proceeds now to speak of the ministry of John the Baptist. Seldom has this noble man had full justice. His humanity is as marked as his bravery and consecration. A careful study of the lesson for today cannot fail to be helpful to teachers and pupils alike, as it illustrates the character and work of John. All teachers and preachers may gladly learn from the noble Baptist to decrease that Christ may increase; to be nothing that he may be everything; to be only a voice proclaiming his glory and directing men to him as the lamb of God.

V. 1. In those days, etc.—The days here mentioned are those during which Christ was living in obscurity in Nazareth. He was there subject to his parents; he was there as the perfect boy, a more difficult conception than that of the perfect man? he was there not merely as the carpenter's son, but as a carpenter. This fact ought to give inspiration, patience and wisdom to every true workingman. Christ is his best friend. A period of about twenty-seven years passed between the time of Christ's going to Nazareth and the beginning of John's ministry. At the age of 12 we have our Lord's brief visit to Jerusalem with his parents. Again the curtain falls; again the silence becomes almost complete. We have the suggestive sentence that Jesus "increased in wisdom and knowledge and in favor with God and man." This silence is remarkable. No miracle is recorded; no glory is displayed; no heavenly voice is heard. This silence, too, is vocal to the thoughtful student. It teaches valuable lessons of patience, submission and preparation.

Came John the Baptist.—The word "John" means one whom Jehovah has graciously given. John was six months the senior of Jesus.

V. 2. Repent.—This word means, as its composition implies, afterthought, reflection, then change of mind. A comparison of passages where the word is found will add other ideas to this one, e. g., sorrow for and forsaking of sin, turning to God and change [illegible]. Another word is found in [illegible] Testament and translated repent," but this does not so much denote a change of mind as sorrow and remorse because of the consequences of the act performed.

Kingdom of Heaven.—This is Matthew's expression. The other evangelists say the kingdom of God, elsewhere in the New Testament the kingdom of Christ, or simply the kingdom, we often find. The prophets generally spoke of the Messiah as the king. This is particularly true of Daniel. It thus came to pass that the words kingdom of heaven came to stand for the reign of the Messiah. The ancient government of God's people was theocratic; in the full sense of its meaning it was the kingdom of God. The people misunderstood the significance of the language. Nevertheless it contained truth. Christ and his apostles restored the term to its true meaning. Christ is king; all truth is his realm. His kingdom is not of this world; it is spiritual; every believer's heart is his throne; the kingdom begins in each regenerated heart; its meaning is extended to include all such persons in the world; it is extended further to include all saints in glory. It will have its grand consummation when every knee bows to Christ and every tongue confesses that he is Lord. Although John may have entertained many partial views of Christ, he at least understood the spiritual nature of his kingdom. It is now drawing near; it is at hand.

V. 3. This quotation is from Isa. xl, 3. In John i, 23, the Baptist applies the prediction to himself. The eastern custom of sending messengers before kings to level hills, fill valleys, etc., gives rise to this figure. The same thing is done still when the sultans and others of rank make their journeys through these wild and uninhabited regions. The stones have to be gathered out, crooked places made straight, and rough places plain. So John went before Jesus.

V. 4. John's Dress.—He was the Elijah of his day. The coarse outer garment was the prophet's dress. The long shaggy hair of the camel furnished material for his raiment. Mantles of this material, it is said, are still worn by Arab guides who conduct travelers, and by shepherds who watch their flocks on the Judean hills. Girdles were a necessity; flowing garments had to be bound about the loins when the wearer was walking or working. His food was locusts, closely resembling grasshoppers. To the Jew they were clean. They might be eaten roasted or boiled; often they were salted and preserved. They are still eaten by the poorer classes. The wild honey could readily be found in the rocks and trees of the wilderness.

V. 5. Jerusalem and all Judea.—The people came in large numbers; not every one, but very many. Such language is common today.

V. 6. Baptized . . . in the river Jordan (as the New Version gives it).—The Jordan, or the Descender, is a river of Palestine; rising near the base of Mount Hermon, it unites with other streams before it enters the Lake of Hûleh; leaving this lake, it flows nine miles to the Sea of Galilee. It is said that its course can be traced through this sea for a mile; thence it continues its crooked way to the Dead Sea. Baptism by John in these flowing waters was accompanied by the confession of sin.

Vs. 7-10. Pharisees and Sadducees.—Both these sects originated about 150 years before Christ; both had their origin in worthy aspirations; both had now greatly degenerated. The Pharisees observed rigidly the letter of the law, and they became intolerant and self righteous. The Sadducees rightly rejected tradition, but they also wrongly denied important truths; they were largely made up of men of wealth and learning. This preacher used great plainness of speech. Brood, offspring of vipers is strong language. Wrath to come is primarily that which came on the Jewish nation at the destruction of Jerusalem; and fully at the judgment on the great day will come on all the wicked. Fruits meet, etc.—Their course of life must show the genuineness of their repentance; sins must be forsaken as well as confessed. Abraham our father.—Men cannot be saved, so John continues, on the faith and worth of others. Hereditary privileges cannot be substituted for personal character; religion is a personal possession.

Vs. 11, 12. Baptize you with Water.—The baptism administered by John implied that all its subjects should live a new life. John's successor was Jesus. John's humility is beautifully suggested here. To take off the sandals and wash the feet were duties of the most menial servant; it was the work of a slave just entering the service of a new master. Baptize you in the Holy Ghost and Fire.—This is the literal rendering. This statement was verified on the day of Pentecost.—Sunday School World.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Consumption Can be Cured

By proper, healthful exercise, and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, which contains the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Dr. D. D. McDonald, Pictodiac, N.B., says: "I have been prescribing Scott's Emulsion with good results. It is especially useful in persons with consumptive tendencies." Put up in 50c. and $1 size.

Belleville-Lindsay.

The Belleville baseball nine played the Lindsays at Lindsay on Thursday, winning by a score of 16 to 11. It is not surprising that Belleville should win as six out of the nine are paid men, receiving salaries of $75 per month. Lindsay, as Peterborough, is amateur. Up to the fourth innings, however, the score stood even.

Worthy of Note.

Messrs. Elliott & Tierney have secured the A. C. A. Camp Store. Visitors to this delightful outing need hardly be reminded that this valuable acquisition to the material comforts of camp life could not possibly be in better hands. Peterborough rices will be the rule. Mr. Elliott will be the dispenser, and this is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be en regle. 6d9

The Demonstration.

The Norwood Register says:—"The streets of the town were beautifully decorated and presented a fine appearance, particularly George street, which was a perfect maze of bunting, flags and arches." And also, "The day was graced with remarkably fine weather and the demonstration was one of the most successful ever held in Canada."

Peterborough in Muskoka.

The Toronto World of July 14 has a five-page account of Muskoka, giving a full and lively description of the country, and profusely illustrated. After a description of Train & Son's saw mill at Burke's Falls, it says:—"This excellent machinery was built by the William Hamilton Machine Works at Peterborough, a concern whose reputation stands unrivalled in this line." There is also a long and appreciative account of the Ontario Canoe factory at Peterborough and the craft it turns out.

Unfortunate.

A young man, who holds quite a prominent place in society, was the victim of circumstances on quiet evenings. This [illegible] on Thursday without being publicly given away. He drove up to the residence of ——— on ——— street with a dashing new rig, and soon he and the lady to whom he has been paying marked attention for the past few weeks were enjoying an evening drive. They had only gone two blocks away when, crash! the new sidebar buggy in going over a crossing went utterly to pieces. The poor young lady was awfully frightened. After taking care of her the young man picked up the wreck and found the buggy to be an imposition from beginning to end. The materials used should put the manufacturer to shame. A confidential friend to whom he related the circumstance, in a down-town billiard room, came the "old woman" on him. "Didn't I tell you," said he, 'when you were buying it that you should go to Porter Bro.'s?" It is feared, however, that the accident will injure ———'s prospects for the hand of the young lady. 1d12-1w28

Six Hundred.

At the Police Court this morning the Magistrate had six Scott Act cases to adjudicate upon: Cochrane vs. McIntyre, Cochrane vs. Keneally, Cochrane vs. Croft, Cochrane vs. J. Clancy, and Cochrane vs. Wilson. Pleas of guilty were entered in all of the cases except the Cochrane vs. Giroux case. The defendant set up the defence that he had leased the bar to T. Gray. On examination the Magistrate decided that the lease was invalid and that Mr. Giroux was responsible for the sale of intoxicating liquor which took place. Fines of $100 and costs were imposed in each of the cases.

Picnic.

St. Paul's Church Sunday School held its annual picnic on the point opposite Lake field on Thursday. About three hundred people, mostly little people, went up on the train in the morning and crossed to the point on the Fairy. Dinner was served and the afternoon spent in sports, canoeing, sailing, etc. After tea the excursion party again took the train and arrived home in good time. The Rev. Messrs. Torrance, Smith and Buchanan accompanied the excursion. No accident occurred to mar the pleasure of the day's outing.

JUST arrived, a Fresh Supply of Ladies' Picnic Hats, at TURNBULL'S.

The Arch.

The True Blues arch was taken down on Thursday afternoon. It was rumoured around town that the Nassau Orangemen were coming down to put up the "No Ross Bible" motto on the arch. It was deemed expedient, therefore, to remove the arch. The True Blues say that they have been relieved of the expense of removing the arch.

COMPARATIVE WORTH OF BAKING POWDERS.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. "H. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler confirms what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

AN EXCURSION TRAIN RUNS INTO A FREIGHT LOADED WITH OIL.

The Cars Take Fire—Desperate Efforts to Escape—Nine Bodies Recovered Burned to a Crisp—Many Injured.

ST. THOMAS, July 15.—A terrible accident occurred at the crossing of the Grand Trunk Railway and Michigan Central Railway in this city about 7 o'clock this evening. An excursion train on the Grand Trunk Railway from Port Stanley ran into a passing freight on the Michigan Central Railway with a number of cars loaded with oil. The engine crushed into one of these cars, when the oil instantly took fire and burned with great fierceness, communicating to the cars on both trains and extending to Griffin's warehouse, coal and lime sheds adjoining the track on the west, and John Campbell's dwelling on the east, all of which were burned to the ground with their contents.

Engineer Donnelly of the excursion train was burned in the wreck, but the fireman jumped and escaped with slight injuries.

The forward car of the excursion train was filled with passengers who made frantic efforts to escape from the burning car, but notwithstanding hundreds of brave and willing hands were immediately at work to assist in their rescue. It is feared a number have lost their lives and will be burned beyond recognition before their bodies can be got out of the wreck.

At 8 o'clock, when thousands of people were crowding around the burning pile one of the oil tanks on the cars suddenly exploded, throwing hundreds to the ground with great force and scattering fire in all directions and severely, perhaps fatally, injuring many.

At 8.30 p. m. nine bodies were taken out burned to a crisp. It is almost impossible to ascertain with any certainty the names of those lost in the wreck until the arrival of the late train from Port Stanley. There are many conflicting rumors, but it seems almost certain that Engineer H. Donnelly, Mr. Zealand, in J. & W. Mickleborough's dry goods store, Mr. Zealand's child, the wife and child of Mr. James Smithers, dry goods merchant, are among the victims. Mrs. Zealand was got out badly burned.

Among those injured by the explosion are:—Herman Ponsford, bricklayer, it is feared fatally; Nelson Gadsby, blacksmith, burned in head; W.H Joyce, engineer Grand Trunk Railway, badly burned on both arms; W. H. Walbourne, Chief of the Fire Department, burned on the neck; Charles Dake of the Dake House, hands and back; Richard Woodruff, back and neck; Oliver Norsworthy, neck and back burned; Archie Norsworthy, neck and arms; son of Mr. Potts, master mechanic Michigan Central Railway, burned on the neck, and scores of others who have sought or were taken to their homes before their names could be learned.

Gangs of men, under the direction of Superintendent Morford and Assistant-superintendent Moorehead of the Michigan Central railway, and J. Stewart, agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, are hard at work removing the debris, and it is expected the track will be cleared by daylight. All the Michigan Central Railroad and Great Northwestern telegraph wires were burned, with several poles, interrupting communication.

CAMPBELLFORD.

HORSE STOLEN.—A horse was stolen from the stable of Mr. Adolphus Rodgers, lot 16 in the 7th concession of Murray, early on Sunday morning last. Mr. Rodgers searched the country in his neighborhood to find the missing animal and on Tuesday he came to Campbellford, got post cards printed, and sent about forty of them to the postmasters of this Riding and adjoining counties. He offers $20 of a reward for information which will lead to the return of the horse and the apprehension of the thief.—Herald.

HOSTILE DEMONSTRATION

Attempted by Irreconcilables in Paris, but Promptly Suppressed.

PARIS, July 15.—Henri Rochefort, Deputies Laisant and Laguerre, and a number of other irreconcilables attempted to excite a hostile demonstration during the review at Longchamps yesterday, but the people around quickly drowned out their voices with cries of "Vive Grevy."

President Grevy has addressed a letter to Gen. Ferron, Minister of War, in which the President says:—"The review was magnificent. I admired the martial bearing and perfect precision of the troops. Convey to them my hearty congratulations."

Later in the day a crowd gathered at the Quai de L'Hotel Louvre, crying "Vive Boulanger!" They refused to disperse and were charged upon by the Paris Guards. It is not known whether any of the crowd were wounded.

DR. M'GLYNN'S REPLY

To the Notice of His Excommunication—Still Defiant.

NEW YORK, July 15.—Dr. McGlynn's first reply to the notice of his excommunication, aside from the impassioned address he delivered on Sunday night, appears in this week's Standard. It occupies over four columns of that paper Dr. McGlynn has not changed in the least the defiant attitude he assumed on Sunday evening towards his former ecclesiastical superiors. There is a manifest effort throughout what he says to justify his course from the beginning. He gives to the public for the first time his final summons to Rome, which was sent him in May: denounces the way in which he was addressed in it by the Cardinal Prefect of the Propaganda, but attributes that prelate's feeling towards him to the "one-sided and numerous letters" sent to Rome against him by Archbishop Corrigan. He also attempts to prove what he and his friends have again and again asserted, that his case was prejudged at Rome, and that he was called there to be disciplined rather than for trial.

A BREACH ON THE BOARD.

Hon. S. C. Wood Resigns From the Bank of Commerce Directorate.

There was talk about town yesterday, especially in commercial circles, that all was not peace and harmony among the newly-elected Board of Directors of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. For some reason not specified, Wm. Elliot, who was Vice-President of the Board last year, and T. S. Stayner, an old time member of it, were "shelved" on Tuesday, and it was said that in consequence there was a good deal of bitter feeling, more especially amongst the older members of the board. After an unsuccessful hunt for several of the directors, a News reporter called on J. H. Davidson, last evening, and asked him about the rerort. Mr. Davidson said at once that there was no truth in the stories at all. "In fact," he said "there is not the slightest foundation for them. There is no split on the board and no disagreement. Two of the old directors resigned at the annual meeting, but they did that of their own free will. Everything on the board is most harmonious, in fact, I don't see how they could be more so."

Though the two directors did resign, it is alleged that it was not of their own free will. That there was a feeling to that effect, is evidenced by the fact that Hon. S. C. Wood, one of the oldest directors on the board, resigned after his re-election, principally, it is said, because of the shut out of William Elliott and T. S. Stayner.

It is also said there are other reasons which influenced Mr. Wood in resigning, but what they are has not transpired yet. So far he is the only one of the newly elected directors who has thought fit to throw up the position.

No one seems to know or cares to say just why the personal of the directorate was changed. A News reporter called at Mr. Strayner's house on Jarvis street last night to ask him for his statement, but the house was closed. It was learned next door that, Tuesday evening, Mr. Strayner left for England for an uncertain period. Mrs. Strayner left to visit some relatives last evening. In the evening further delopments are watched for with interest in commercial circles.—Toronto News.

LATEST CABLE NEWS.

MUNSTER'S REMONSTRANCE.

LONDON, July 15.—The Post says: "Count Von Munster, the German ambassador at Paris, recently remonstrated with M. Flourens against the violent attacks made upon Germany by the Radical press, especially one article dubbing the Count himself as the "Grand Master of the Order of Spiel," and describing the German embassy as "a nest of reptiles." Lord Lyons, the British ambassador, also protested, saying that if such attacks were allowed the position of ambassador would become untenable. M. Flourens was sincerely grieved, and expressed himself in most conciliatory terms.

TROOPS AND PEOPLE.

PARIS, July 15.—Though no display of force was made here yesterday, it was evident that elaborate precautions were made in the vicinity of Longchamps to suppress immediately any attempt at disorder. The mood of the crowds politically was listless, the only person receiving a genuine ovation being M. Fioquet. The greatest enthusiasm was shown for the army, and at the conclusion of the review there was heartly fraternization between the troops and the people

THE PARIS CELEBRATION.

PARIS, July 15.—The celebration which began yesterday in commemoration of the fall of the Bastile was continued until this morning. The fete was observed in an orderly manner. The newspapers highly compliment the people for the good sense shown in refraining from everything of a disturbing nature. There were a few isolated manifestations, but they were of no political importance.

A MAKESHIFT.

LONDON, July 15.—The Government's land bill, as at present drawn, is regarded as a mere makeskift. The crudeness and weakness of the measure leads to the criticism that it was not introduced in good faith, but merely to formally fulfil a pledge that is not intended to be fulfilled in spirit. The bankruptcy clause is considered as the weakest part of the bill, and is almost certain to cause its failure in committee if insisted upon. Mr. Balfour, the Irish Secretary, acknowledged that a land purchase bill pure and simple will be imperatively called for the next session.

MORE FIGHTING IN AFGHAN.

LONDON, July 15.—News from native sources in Cabul to the effect that a battle between the troops of the Ameer of Afghanistan and the insurgents recently took place at Mashaki, south of Guzni, and that the Ameer's forces were victorious. They are said to have captured one hundred and sixty Andars Tarakis, and to have sent the heads of two hundred of the slain to Cabul. A large force of Jaghuri and Hazrahs subsequently defeated the troops of the Ameer, who is now sending reinforcements to his army.

THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, July 15.—The Government, at the request of Lord Hartington and Mr. Chamberlain, have consented to consider the question of providing in the Land Bill some mode of immediate relief for over rented tenants. The dissident Liberals' amendments propose an extension of the equitable jurisdiction clause, the withdrawal from landlord of the power to proceed against a tenant by a writ of fieri facias, the inclusion of all leaseholders, without exception, and at their own option, in the benefits of the act of 1881, and the entire withdrawal of the bankruptcy clauses.

PRINCE FERDINAND'S CHANCES.

LONDON, July 15.—There was a two hours' discussion of the Bulgarian question at yesterday's session of Lord Salisbury's Cabinet. From what can be learned of the opinion in diplomatic circles, the chances of Prince Ferdinand's ever taking his seat upon the throne which has been offered him are growing steadily less encouraging.

THE YACHT THISTLE.

LONDON, July 15.—The Yacht Thistle will make the voyage across the Atlantic under one lower mast and a reefed try sail about the size of a sixty-ton yacht's mainsail. It is intended to make practice cruises in American waters before the races for the American cup.

A LOST OPPORTUNITY.

ROME, July 15.—The Pope, conversing with an American Archbishop, said:—"Dr. McGlynn lost his best opportunity by not coming to Rome while Cardinal Gibbons was here. He would have seen that the church, by not condemning the Knights of Labor, was the supporter of the many against the feudal system, whether the feudality is represented by slavery, territorial right or modern capital."

DECREASE OF CRIME.

DUBLIN, July 14.—Justice O'Brien, in his address to the grand jury of the county of Kerry to-day, stated that there was a decrease of crime in the country. He said he could not, however, congratulate the people on the fact, the cause of it being the complete subjugation of the peaceable members of the community to a lawless organization, which was now allowing the well disposed a little repose from violence. Notwithstanding this there were sixty cases of malicious injury before the jury, showing that a deplorable amount of crime was still committed with impunity. The applications for protection had also increased. The social tyranny had extended to mercantile dealings and legal demands, resulting in complete suspension of the law.

LINDSAY.

NEARLY POISONED.—On Wednesday afternoon last, a young child of Mr. J. Bates undertook to play doctor to the baby. The result was most terrible. A teaspoonful of laudanum was given the baby, resulting nearly in death. Medical aid was at once summoned, the stomach pump was used and after much effort the child was restored to consciousness. At present the little sufferer is very low. Warder.

SHINGLE MILL DESTROYED.—On Wednesday morning about 3.15 o'clock the shingle mill at Emily Cross Creek, owned and run by Gordon & Graham, was burned and totally destroyed. Three of the mill hands, Wm. McGinnis, W. Sutton and D. A. McDonald, were sleeping in a tent about forty feet from the mill, and only awakened in time to get out of the tent in safety. The mill had only been running a short time and the loss will fall heavily on the owners. About 80,000 shingles were burned and only by strenuous exertions a large quantity of cedar logs, posts and ties were saved from a similar fate. The cause of the fire is unknown, and is supposed to have been accidental, although the mill hands made a thorough inspection of the mill at 9 o'clock the night previous.—Post.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW

The Present Situation Summarized—Rains Much Needed in Several Localities

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 15.—The American Rural Home summarizes the present crop situation as follows: During the past fourteen days rains have greatly benefited the growing crops, but owing to a lack o reserve moisture in the ground the relief has been only temporary. Rains are sadly needed in Illinois and large portions of Ohio and Indiana. The corn crop is now earing, but continued rains are of vital importance to ensure a good crop. In Nebraska the prospects are good, but not equal to last year. Rains have improved the crop in Iowa, but only temporarily. Kansas gives better promise than any state west of the Missouri River. The prospect is good in Missouri. It is impossible to estimate the final outcome, and while the crop is not in the danger line, it cannot be reported otherwise. Insects have damaged the spring wheat crop in Minnesota; as a whole the rains have improved the condition somewhat, and the outcome will be a fair crop. In the Red River Valley, from Fargo to the Missouri, west the prospect is not so good. Threshings of winter are better than anticipated, although there is no uniformity of the yield. Kansas has the poorest crop. The meadows are in a bad condition, and many farmers are feeding hay. The wheat crop promises good in India and Southern Russia, and farmers cannot expect high prices on account of a short crop abroad.

Owing to the extraordinary crop prospects throughout the Province of Manitoba there has been such a great demand for agricultural implements that every dealer in Winnipeg has completely sold out.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes "as bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. 25 cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

A FIRE IN MONTREAL

The St. Lawrence Sugar Refinary Burned—Loss of Life.

MONTREAL, July 15.—This morning a most disastrous fire broke out in the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery. At a quarter past six flames burst from the building and almost stimultaneously four alarms were struck. When the brigade arrived the whole place was in flames. At first it seemed as though the fire would swallow all around, but in a short time the brigade had streams on. The saddest incident was the death of one of the sugar boilers, named Moore. He was decending a fire escape on Queen street when a sea of fire engulfed him and he fell to the sidewalk dead. At nine o'clock the seven-storey wall on King street fell out with a tremendous crash. Several persons are missing, and it is almost certain they have been lost in the ruins.

The new building of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery, which adjoined the old building, which was destroyed by this morning's fire, was only recently erected at a cost of $250,000. Operations had been carried on in the new building only for a few weeks. About four years ago a fire also occurred in the old building. Over 1,200 barrels of sugar were in the premises at the time of the fire, about 50 of which were refined and 150,000 lbs. were undergoing the refining process. The fire originated in the boiler-room, and in a very few minutes the whole of that part of the building was ablaze. The books and papers of the establishment are all saved, not having been in the building. A great alarm was caused this afternoon in the Warmington Stamp Works by the fall of a large portion of the wall of the refinery and part of the filtering apparatus and boilers, but fortunately no one was injured. The entire loss is estimated at nearly $600,000, and there is $180,000 not covered by insurance.

A fire occurred in these premises on Jan. 22, 1885, the insurance then being $167,357.49, and the loss to the insurance companies amounted to $124,696.61. Four hundred men will be thrown out of employment.

Mrs. Leslie Refuses a Prince.

NEW YORK, July 15.—A London special to the Sun says that Mrs. Frank Leslie has declined an offer of marriage from Prince Eristoff, and the prince has left London without challenging the Marquis de Leuville, who attacked him with a whip while he was riding with Mrs. Leslie. The Prince's neglect to fight a duel is said to be in deference to the earnest request of Mrs. Leslie that he avoid any further trouble. He is not obliged under the code of honor to challenge the Marquis de Leuville, as the latter is said to be no Marquis at all, but the son of a tailor, while Prince Eristoff is of high lineage.

Scarcity of Fish.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., July 15.—A scarcity of fish is reported from Quirkpon to St. John's. The Green Bay fishing, especially, is almost blank, neither codfish nor salmon being taken, and not much caplin. Reports from the Labrador side of the straits are more cheering. Fish are reported plenty from Forteau to Henly. Reports from the westward and southern shores are that there are few or no fish there.

A Pointer.

When Col. Sellers gives you a "pointer" in stocks, my friend, leave them severely alone, but when your own feelings tell you that you have palpitation of the heart, asthma, bronchitis or catarrh, which, unless checked, are apt to run into consumption, heed the admonition before it is too late. All the diseases enumerated, and others, arise from impure blood. Put the liver in action, the largest gland in the human body, and you will speedily regain your lost health, and your bad feelings will disappear. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will accomplish the work speedily and certainly. Ask your druggist.

INTER-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE.

If the conference of Provincial Premiers which it is contemplated to hold in Quebec is not a mere combination of Reformers to attack the Central Government so long as it is Conservative, there are some subjects which they might discuss and on which they might compare notes with a prospect of benefit to the country.

One of those questions is the incidence of the burden of local expenditures, and especially the division of the expenditure between the Provincial and Municipal Treasuries. Speaking merely from general information as to the system in the sister Provinces, it seems that each of them differs more or less from the others and from Ontario as to the sources from which the money is derived for education, public buildings, means of communication, care of the afflicted, administration of justice, protection of property and other local expenses. In Ontario a very large proportion of the expenditure for such purposes is obtained by direct taxation—by rates on real and personal property levied and collected by or through the municipal authorities, and expended by county, town or village councils, school boards and so forth. The grants in aid or direct payments from the Provincial Treasury are far less in amount than the local rates. It is certain that in the other Provinces the Provincial Treasury bears a far larger proportion of the burden and the local rates a far smaller proportion. It would be both interesting and useful to have authoritative information as to the classes of expenditure which are provided from either source, the contributions from each respectively for different purposes and the total amount provided by each, so as to afford a means of comparison for the Provinces. Such information, besides being useful in other ways, would throw valuable light upon the subject of subsidies and other assistance from the Dominion Treasury to the Provinces, and might afford an explanation of the asserted difficulty several of the Provinces experience in paying their way unless the subsidies are increased. This is a matter of especial and practical interest to the people of Ontario, who individually meet such expenses from their own several pockets, and who therefore should not be asked in their collective capacity as part of the population of the Dominion to give increased payments to the people of other Provinces, who do not as individuals contribute to their local requirements.

If the three Maritime Provinces are represented at the conference their premiers might consider the same question from an additional point of view. With a smaller combined population than Ontario, they maintain a triple executive and legislative staff, and not unnaturally find their Provincial Treasuries left rather empty. If they are unwilling to adopt both expedients at once, they might consider whether they would rather obtain the necessary relief by uniting the Provinces, or by local assessment for local needs. They cannot fairly expect the people of Ontario after contenting themselves with a single executive and one legislative chamber for a population of more than two million and paying individually for local purposes, to agree very cheerfully to contribute more largely to subsidies to enable the Maritime Provinces to maintain a three fold government and six chambers for less than half the population, and to relieve them from paying individually for their municipal and local requirements.

If Mr. Mowat has any surplus energy left after joining it the work of attacking the Central Government because it is Conservative, he might do some good by pursuing the line of investigation we have indicated.

The Lindsay Post asks why we allude to the "so-called" West Victoria Farmers' Institute. Because the active members at the late meeting appear to have been rather Grit wirepullers than farmers. There may be farmers on the roll, who do not appear at the meetings. In the same column of the Post is a letter from a young farmer complaining that the meetings are held in the town, and not among the farmers, who are not even notified in time to attend. By this means it is contrived that the political wirepullers shall be able to speak and act for the absent farmers. At every so-called Farmers' Institute meeting to discuss Commercial Annexation, as far as we have seen them reported, the majority of the leading participants, chairmen, speakers, movers and seconders of resolutions, have been Republican lawyers with a brief against President Cleveland, Grit lawyers with a brief against Sir John Macdonald, heads of monopolist rings, Mowat officials and other Grit wirepullers, not farmers. It is an artificial agitation on both sides of the line. Even the resolutions are stereotyped documents supplied from the central organization.

We regret that Mr. Cluxton does not consent to answer our correspondent's queries, because we wish especially to see the articles named for which it is claimed our farmers would obtain more by selling in the United States than at home, taking the market rates, and leaving out of consideration the duties. None of the advocates of Commercial Union venture upon this practical ground, but indulge instead in theories as to who pays the duty. We find by comparing current market reports here and across the line that our farmers would gain on barley and they would lose on wheat, oats, pork, cheese and butter. We would like to see the list made more complete by someone who is competent. These, however, are among our farmers' chief exports. With this solid foundation of facts, there would be less danger of being lead astray by theories of what might be.

MR. CLUXTON ON JUNO'S OPEN LETTER ON COMMERCIAL UNION.

DEAR SIR,—I have read with interest your letter in yesterday's REVIEW. I think it is a pity you have used a nom de plume. The capable writer of the letter over the affix of "Juno" need not hesitate, or be too modest, to write in his own name.

If I should undertake to reply to the anonymous letters that may be poured upon us on this absorbing and important question, I, and the REVIEW, would have what they term in the States a "hot time."

If you will send your name to the REVIEW for publication, I will endeavour, to the best of my humble ability, to answer your numerous questions, which cover a wide field. I do not like shooting in the dark, while my adversary has the advantage of seeing me.

You lay down the following proposition and say:—"As a matter of fact, the United States produces the same things as we produce, not only sufficient for their home use, but a surplus for exporting." Is this true, sir? Let us see. Last year Canada sent 15,787 horses to the United States. The stated price of these was $1,761,496, nearly $120 each. The duty paid on these was $352,298. The United States in 1886 imported from Canada 33,165 head of cattle, valued at $443,430, on which the duty was $39,686. Canadian farmers sent to the markets of the United States 343,962 sheep, valued at $948,514. The duty paid was $85,709. And Canada exported to the United States last year between eight and nine million bushels of barley, which paid a duty of [illegible] per bushel, not taking into account [illegible] which paid a higher [illegible] this barley. Canadian farmers also exported to the United States in 1886 about thirteen million dozen of eggs, worth in the neighborhood of one and three quarter million of dollars. Eggs are admitted free of duty into the United States. This accounts for the impetus given to this great trade. If we had unrestricted reciprocity with the United States would it be unreasonable to suppose that our trade in cattle, horses, sheep, lambs, butter, wool and poultry, would increase ten fold. Every farmer would get from $20 to $30 more for every horse, $10 more for every ox, and $10 more for every fifty dollars worth of sheep, lambs or poultry, and ten cents per pound more for every pound of wool exported to our neighbours across the line. What a change this would make in the butter trade to which you have alluded in your letter. At present the Canadian farmer has to send his butter 300 miles to the English market where he has to compete with German butterine and oleomargerine, articles now so perfectly manufactured that not one person out of one hundred could distinguish them from fine dairy butter. He has also to submit to the old fashioned way of doing business there, where he is docked in weights, eaten up with excessive charges, and where he has to sell at four months' credit, when he might have a market almost at his own door, where he could sell for cash and have quick returns; the duty of four cents per pound being removed by the obliteration of the customs line. If the vast sums of money paid for duties on Canadian farm produce exported to the States were distributed among Canadian farmers in giving him enhanced prices for nearly everything he raises he would soon be able to remove encumbrances on his farm, and also enable him to buy more land for his sons. You have given an extract from the Journal of Commerce in reference to Professor Goldwin Smith's advocacy of Commercial Union. I will take the liberty of quoting an extract from the Hon. Mr. Butterworth's speech at Port Hope the other day. Mr. Butterworth said as an illustration of the producer in Ontario: "A Farmer starts from Ontario with a car load of barley for New York. When he reaches the picket line the United States Government kindly takes one bushel out of every seven. He pays freight, storage and commission, and buys corn on the United States side and starts home. His own Government stops him at the picket line and the officers take one bushel in every four. Thus after a season of unremitting toil he is permitted to rejoice in the fact, that in exchanging his produce for things necessary for his family, he has had wrested from him by two Christian Governments one half of his goods. (Applause.) If he crossed the line several times with the same goods the Governments would have all his goods, and he would have the felicity of knowing he had at least saved himself."

I have not touched upon the great lumber and mining interests in this letter.

Yours respectfully,
W. CLUXTON.

JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

Meanwhile things had been going as ill without as within. First of all—that was the day after John's departure—two or three loyal Boers and an English storekeeper from Lake Chrissie, in New Scotland, outspanned on the place and came and implored Silas Croft to fly for his life into Natal while there was yet time. They said that the Boers would certainly shoot any Englishmen who might be sufficiently defenseless. But the old man would not listen.

"I am an Englishman—civis Romanus sum," he said, in his sturdy fashion, "and I do not believe that they will touch me, who have lived among them for twenty years. At any rate, I am not going to run away and leave my place at the mercy of a pack of thieves. If they shoot me they will have to reckon with England for the deed, so I expect that they will leave me alone. Bessie can go if she likes, but I shall stop here and see the row through, and there's an end of it." Whereon, Bessie having flatly declined to budge an inch, the loyalists departed in a hurry, metaphorically wringing their hands at such an exhibition of ill placed confidence and insular pride. This little scene occurred at dinner time, and after dinner old Silas proceeded to hurl defiance at his foes in another fashion. Going to a cupboard in his bedroom, he extracted an exceedingly large Union Jack, and promptly advanced with it to an open spot between two of the orange trees in front of the house, where a flagstaff was planted, formed of a very tall young blue gum, in such a position that it could be seen for miles around. On this flagstaff it was old Silas' habit to hoist the Union Jack on the queen's birthday, Christmas day and other state occasions.

"Now, Jantje," he said, when he had bent on the flag, "run her up, and I'll cheer!" and, accordingly, as the broad flag floated out on the breeze, he took off his hat and waved it, and gave such a "hip, hip, hurrah!" in his stentorian tones that Bessie came running down from the house to see what was the matter. Nor was he satisfied with this, but, having obtained a ladder, he placed it against the post and sent Jantje up it, instructing him to fasten the rope on which the flag was bent about fifteen feet from the ground, so that nobody should get at it to haul it down.

"There," he said, "I've nailed my colors to the mast. That will show these gentry that an Englishman lives here.

"Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks—
God save the queen."

"Amen," said Bessie, but she had her doubts about the wisdom of that Union Jack which, whenever the wind blew, streamed out a visible defiance not calculated to soothe the breast of excited patriots.

Indeed, two days after that, a patrol of three Boers, spying the ensign while yet a long way off, came galloping up in hot haste to see what it meant. Silas saw them coming, and, taking his rifle in his hand, went and stood beneath the flag, for which he had an almost superstitious veneration, feeling sure that they would not dare to meddle either with him or it.

"What is the meaning of this, Om Silas?" asked the leader of the three men, with all of whom he was perfectly acquainted.

"It means that an Englishman lives here, Jan," was the answer.

"Haul the dirty rag down," said the man.

"I will see you d—d first!" replied old Silas.

Thereupon the Boer dismounted and made for the flagstaff, only to find Uncle Croft's rifle in a direct line with his chest.

"You will have to shoot me first, Jan," he said, and thereon, after some consultation, they left him and went away.

The fact was that, notwithstanding that he was an Englishman, Silas Croft was very popular with the Boers, most of whom had known him since they were children, and a member of whose volksraad he had twice been. It was to this personal popularity that he owed the fact that he was not turned out of his house and forced to choose between serving against his countrymen or being imprisoned and otherwise maltreated at the very commencement of the rebellion.

For a fortnight or more after this flag episode nothing of any importance happened, and then came the news of the crushing defeat at Laing's Nek. At first Silas Croft would not believe the news. "No general could have been so mad," he said; but soon the report was amply confirmed from native sources.

Another week passed, and with it came the news of the British defeat at Ingogo. The first they heard of it was on the morning of Feb. 8, when Jantje brought a Kaffir up to the veranda at breakfast time. This Kaffir said that he had been watching the fight from a mountain; that the English were completely hemmed in and fighting well, but that "their arms were tired," and that they would all be killed at night time. The Boers, he said, were not suffering at all—the English could not "shoot straight." After hearing this they passed a sufficiently miserable day and evening. About 12 o'clock that night, however, a native spy Mr. Croft had dispatched came back with the report that the English general had got safely back to camp, having suffered heavily and abandoned his wounded, many of whom had died in the rain, for the night after the battle was wet.

Then came another long pause, during which no reliable news reached them, though the air was thick with rumors, and old Silas was made happy by hearing that large re-enforcements were on their way from England.

"Ah, Bessie, my dear, they will soon sing another tune now," he said, in great glee; "and what's more, it's about time they did. I can't understand what the soldiers have been about—I can't indeed."

SUMMER SCHOOL AT NORTHFIELD.

To the Editor of the Review.

NORTHFIELD, Mass., July 15th, 1887

SIR,—This last letter of mine will give a brief account of the work crowded into the three last days of the Northfield summer Conference. The Sunday morning service was a very solemn one, Mr. Moody giving his sermon on "The Spirit's Power for Service." Those who have heard or read this address know that Mr. Moody draws a very clear distinction between the ordinary impartation of the Spirit to every believer, and the special gift of the spirit for service. The question was pressed home to the individual heart, and the result cannot but be seen in the near future in many fields of work.

On Sunday afternoon, a missionary meeting of much more than average interest was held, presided over by the Rev. Dr. Ashmead, of China. The first speakers were the young men who go in a few weeks to the foreign field. One of these was Mr. H. T. Lallamme of McMaster Hall, Toronto, who is going to the Telagn Country, India. The next couple of speakers was a Chinese young man converted in Chicago, and an Indian named Moore from Alaska. Mr. McFee, an undergraduate of Cambridge, spoke next. He goes to the mission field at his own expense on leaving college. Mr. Forman, af Princeton College, was the next speaker. One of the facts that he presented was that during the past twelve months, 10,000,000 persons have died in heathendom without Christ. One of two others and speakers followed. It was then announced that 2,000 young men who have decided to become foreign missionaries since last years' Conference here, a number have given their names since coming to the present gathering.

Prof. Drummond gave his best address at the Sunday evening service. His subject was "Love," which he said was the summum bonum of life. His text was the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians. The analysis of love given by him out of this passage of Scripture was as follows:—

Patience—love passive.
Kindness—love active.
Generosity—lack of envy.
Humility—love hiding.
Courtesy—love in little things.
Unselfishness—love not seeking her own rights.
Good temper—love not easily provoked.
Guilelessness—love believing.
Sincerity—love learning.

In closing Prof. Drummond asked his hearers to read the above chapter once a week for the next three months.

The whole of Monday morning was given up to the answering of questions, most of which bore on different aspects of Young Men's Christian Association work. Mr. Moody is a very warm friend of this department of Christian work. Several of the students here (about 20 or 25) have decided to enter the General Secretaryship.

On Monday evening Prof. Drummond was present for the last time, and instead of giving an address answered a number of questions sent to him which had been raised by his previous addresses.

Tuesday was the closing day of the Conference, and the interest did not flag to the very end. The whole morning was spent in prayer and Bible study with reference to the impartation of the Holy Spirit for service.

Mr. Moody announced that all who wished to do so could meet him in the afternoon and climb to the top of one of the neighboring hills. Nearly every delegate turned out at the time appointed. A short distance from Mr. Moody's house a halt was made at his mother's residence where a college song and a hymn were sung for Mrs. Moody, who though far advanced in years is still hale and hearty. On the top of the hill the sermon on the Mount was read and commented on, the whole forming a very vivid and pleasing experience.

The Tuesday night meeting was the closing one, and was turned into a thanksgiving meeting by Mr. Moody, representatives of Yale, Harwood, Princeton, McGill, Queen's Toronto University and many other colleges gave their impressions of the conferences and expressed their gratitude for having been present. The general opinion was that there was likely to be increased spiritual activity next fall in the various colleges represented as one result of this gathering.

The call has been issued for the usual conference here in August, from the 2nd to the 12th. Prof. Drummond will be present, and among the others who will aid are Rev. Dr. J. H. Brookes, St Louis; Rev. Dr. Pierson, Philadelphia; Rev. Dr. Gordon, Boston, and Mr. Francis Murphy. A wide invitation is given to all who wish to attend and it will be a very pleasant way of spending a vacation. The country all around here is very lovely, the place being surrounded by hills, and the Connecticut river flowing through the valley. G.E.W.

In Brief, and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existance. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy,

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents.

Headache, Billiousness, Dyspepsia and Indigestion relieved and at once by Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters. Try it. Samples free.

THE CITY AND SUBURBS

Excursion.

The canton Outeaois, of Ottawa, have advertised an excursion from the Capital to Peterborough on August 10th.

JUST arrived, a Fresh Supply of Ladies' Picnic Hats, at TURNBULL'S.

Gospel Tent.

Services in the Gospel Tent, corner of Georoge and King streets, for Sunday will be held at 4 and 8.30 p. m. Meetings are announced to be continued during every evening next week at 8 p.m.

Under The Gaslight.

People are crowding every evening to see the gaslight Jubilee arch, and at the same time to see the pure silk Gloves, 8 buttons lengths, that J. J. Sheehy is selling for 45 cents.

Young Men's Meetings.

A brief account of Mr. Moody's summer school at Northfield will be given at the meeting in the Young Men's Christian Association hall to-night at eight o'clock. All young men are invited. The meetings on Sunday will be at 4 and 8.30 o'clock.

WITHOUT any doubt KIDD has the best value in boots and shoes.

Another Step Forward.

The Toronto Labor Reformer, which recently secured the subscription list of the Hamilton Palladium of Labor, has now amalgamated with it the Toronto Labor Record. The Reformer is enterprising and progressive and shows considerable ability.

A Second Sentence.

On Wednesday last Frank Kearns, who was arrested here and taken to Lindsay, having learned, the Post says, that witnesses were coming forward to prove the theft, owned up that he was guilty of stealing a horse from Mr. George Groves, of Emily, during November last, and upon this admission he was sentenced to one year and six months in the central prison.

Worthy of Note.

Messrs. Elliott & Tierney have secured the A. C. A. Camp Store. Visitors to this delightful outing need hardly be reminded that this valuable acquisition to the material comforts of camp life could not possibly be in better hands. Peterborough prices will be the rule. Mr. Elliott will be the dispenser, and this is a sufficient guarantee that everything will be en regle. 6d9

REMNANTS of Prints and Muslins must all be cleared out this week at Turnbull's. For Genuine Bargains call at TURNBULL'S.

Grimsby Park.

The Fire Brigade have decided to hold their excursion to Grimsby Park on Thursday, July 28th. A special train will leave the C. P. R. station at 6 o'clock a. m., arriving in Toronto in time to connect with the steamer Rupert, which leaves at 9 o'clock. Fare for the round trip, $2, including admission to the Park. Fare to Toronto and return, $1.50, good for two days. There will be a special attraction for visitors at Grimsby Park on July 28th, in the shape of two concerts, afternoon and evening, by the Arion Orchestra, of Toronto.

A. C. A.

The prospects for a very successful canoe meet at Stoney Lake in August are good. Every day the Acting Secretary, Mr. Harold Morrow, who is officiating in the absense of Mr. J. D. Collins, is receiving inquiries of all kinds. Nearly all the canoe clubs of the province will be represented. Toronto and Ottawa will be present in full force. On Friday Mr. M. Tierney went up to the lake to select a location for the camp store. It will be situated in the same place as before and a building twenty-five feet square will be erected and filled with the luxuries the season. Mr. A. Elliott will act as postmaster.

THE MATCHED TROT.

Bessie K. Wins by Three Heats to Two.

On Thursday, the day named for the matched trot between Bessie K, owned by T. W. Foster, of Hamilton, and Fanny B, owned by F. J. Daly, Peterborough, it rained all forenoon and it was thought that the race would have to be postponed, but it cleared off at noon, and, though the track was muddy, the makers of the match decided to trot the race. The terms were: best three in five, mile heats; stakes, $100 a side.

The race, which took place in the Driving Park, drew a crowd. At about a quarter past three o'clock the trotters appeared on the track, Foster driving Bessie K. and Ed. Brown driving Fanny B.

The betting stood at evens, Fanny being the favorite.

The Judges, Messrs. H. Calcutt, Peterborough, C. McGuire, Port Hope, and Mr. Brown, Toronto, took their places in the judges stand. Fanny got the pole and the two trotted easily up the homestretch and turned. On the first score they were rung back but on the second they went away, Fanny slightly leading. The chesnut broke and lost ten yards which Fanny held till the three quarter post. The chesnut then poked ahead but again broke near the homestretch. She caught her feet again, however, and won by a trifle. Time 2.59.

While the grooms were busy rubbing the trotters the betting crowd were also busy. Even bets were made on the next heat but the scale on the race turned five to four in favor of the chesnut.

In the second heat Fanny held the lead she got till the first ¼. The chestnut, however, outfooted her at the three quarter but shortly after, though three lengths ahead, Fanny again came up. It was thought rather a strange procedure that the chestnut did not take the pole when she might have done so. Fanny led and came in ahead. Time 2.51.

The crowd stopped betting as it was alleged that the chestnut had been pulled at the three quarter.

The next heat was won by the chestnut in 2.47½ and the next by Fanny in 2.48.

It was here that the shouting commenced. Henry Elliott, of Port Hope, who put up the stake on Bessie K., tore around and demanded another driver. In the meantime Mr. Calcutt had left the stand and Mr. H. C. Winch took his place. Harry decided that either another driver should be put behind the chesnut or that all bets be declared off. Foster argued that, according to rules, $50 ould have to be put up before the driver could be changed and even then two heats would have to be lost in succession before they could put him off. Mr. Winch replied that his refusal looked suspicions. This made Foster appear mad. He went up the track and came back again. Then he stopped and lectured the judges. The judges acknowledged that, according to rules, he was right. Foster offered to bet one hundred to a one dollar bill that he was right and that he had been right all the way through. And to show that he was square he would let another driver behind the mare. Lawson, of Brighton, the former owner drove the last heat. The race was very pretty for the first half but on the second round Fanny was left behind. The cheering was wild and Lawson received a shower of $5 bills. The time was 2.47½.

The summary is as follows:—

Bessie K.	1 2 1 2 1
Fanny B.	2 1 2 1 2

Time,—2.59, 2.51, 2.47½, 2.48, and 2.47½.

A Life Insurance Surprise.

When the news spread in town that Messrs. Geo. A. Morrison and A. Wilson had resigned their positions as Inspectors for their two Companies and taken the joint managership for Eastern Ontario for the "Manufacturer's Life," of Toronto, it caused a sensation among insurance men. In severing their connection with their former Companies was not of any personal nature, but to assume a more responsible position. The new Company has the strongest financial capital of any Life Company on this Continent, and the men who are at the head of it would give confidence to any organization. The new firm is styled Wilson & Morrison. Mr. Morrison has charge of the office and town department while Mr. Wilson takes charge of the superintendency of the agency department. Their new offices, over Alexander's dry goods store, would be a credit to the city of Toronto. In another column will be found an article from the Mail. We bespeak for the firm a large business, as the most popular plans of Life Insurance has been adopted by the Company. Mr. Wilson leaves on Monday for Kingston.

THE MANUFACTURERS' LIFE.

A New Insurance Company Organized—Strong and Influential Directorate.

The Toronto Mail says:—"The Manufacturers' Life Insurance Company, which was organized in this city yesterday, is one of the strongest institutions of its kind on this continent. The capital is $2,000,000. All the scrip was issued half an hour after the termination of yesterday's meeting, and a large number of applications had to be refused. The company will start business to-day at its offices, King street east. The President, Sir John Macdonald, came from Ottawa for the express purpose of presiding. Sir Alexander Campbell, Mr George Gooderham and Mr. William Bell, of Guelph, are the Vice-Presidents, and the directorate embraces some of the best known men in financial and commercial circles in the Dominion. The modified natural endowment plan has been adopted, all policies being payable at the age of 65. Mr. J. B. Carlile, formerly of the North American Life, is Managing Director, and Mr. J. D. Henderson, for many years the active agent in this city of the Canada Life, is the chief agent and superintendent of agencies. With such experienced men the Palm the Manufacturers' Life is bound to make rapid progress." 1d14-1w28

THE LAND BILL.

The Committee Stage Postponed—Lord R. Churchill's New Departure

LONDON, July 16.—The Government has postponed the committee stage of the Land Bill for several days. Meanwhile they are seriously considering their position, the Unionists standing pretty firm. There are already one hundred and thirty amendments to the bill, one of which is Mr. Morley's proposal that tenants whose judicial rents date from the 1st of January, 1886, should be allowed a revision. It is not thought that the amendment will be carried, though the Unionists favor some proposal for a revision of rents, but it will probably be supported by a large minority. The government will not secure a majority of more than thirty, or forty against it. They have, however, first to settle their own internal difficulties before they can present any front to the Unionists and Gladstonians. Lord Salisbury is believed to be standing to his guns. He favors dropping the bill altogether, rather than to make concessions which will reduce it practically to a leasehold enfranchisement bill. As for Lord Randolph Churchill, he cannot join in the Cabinet at present. He has practically taken a new departure with regard to the Irishmen, which is totally at variance with the "Parnellism and crime" business. Lord Randolph Churchill made a deliberate open invitation to Irish members to lend their services to the Government for the improvement of the Land bill. This is an attitude hopelessly incompatible with the Government policy.

Sir George Otto Trevelyan has declared in favor of a large and ale measure of self-government for Ireland, such as can be satisfactorily arranged by consultation within the Liberal party and with representatives of Ireland.

NOT REBELS OR TRAITORS.

Jefferson Davis' Defence of the Confederate Soldiers.

NEW ORLEANS, July 16.—The Continental Guards of this city, an organization which includes among its members veterans of both the Union and Confederate armies, made a visit on the fourth to Beauvoir, the home of Jefferson Davis. Mr. Davis addressed the command, and said among other things:—"To you of the late Confederate army it may not be inappropriate to say you are treading in the footsteps of your sires, wherein you defended the state Sovereignty they had acquired and the right of a people to be governed only according to their consent. The constitution was the expression of that consent and you claimed the right and privileges of the compact. That you were unsuccessful is a fact which we will not discuss, but I claim it is due from each and all of us that our countrymen who fill soldiers' graves shall to your children and your children's children to all coming generations be defended as patriots, and that never will you supinely allow them to be branded as rebels or traitors."

AT WIMBLEDON.

Good Shooting by Canadians—Prince of Wales' Prize Coming Over.

LONDON, July 17.—In the shooting in the second stage for the Queen's prize at Wimbledon to-day, Dodds, of the First Dumfries regiment, and Gardiner, of the First Cumberland regiment, tied for first prize. Gardiner finally won the bronze medal. Gillies, of the 90th Canada regiment, and Heath, of the First Manchester regiment, tied for the Prince of Wales' prize of £200 and a badge. Gillies won in shooting off the tie. Three Canadians, Gillies, Thomson and Longstroth, obtained money prizes in their contest. The silver medal for the highest aggregate score in the second stage of shooting for the Queen's prize was won by Hill, of the Fifth Lanarkshire regiment.

FIRE IN NEW YORK.

A Terrific Explosion—Many Firemen Burned on Hands and Feet.

NEW YORK, July 16.—Fire was discovered about three o'clock this morning in the five story brick building on the Metropolitan Storage Warerooms in 38th street, between Broadway and Sixth avenue. Before the firemen arrived the whole place was a raging furnace. The building formed an L with the Casino building, and for awhile it was feared that that beautiful temple of light opera would be destroyed, but it was saved by the efforts of the firemen. The Hotel Normandy is quite near, and soon the sparks descending on the building set it on fire and the guests were hurriedly summoned to leave. The fire on the roof of the hotel was soon extinguished, however, and the guests returned. Soon after the firemen had got to work at the warehouse a terrific explosion occurred and seven firemen who were at work on the first floor were blown through the windows to the street. All of them were very severely burned about the hands and feet. The damage is estimated at half a million.

THE ACCIDENT AT ST. THOMAS.

Eleven Lives Lost by the Collision—Many Hurt by the Explosion.

ST. THOMAS, July 17.—It is now settled beyond doubt that eleven persons lost their lives in the appalling collision here on Friday night. The following are the names of the victims:—Mrs. J. Smithers and child, Mr. S Zeland and child, Mrs. S. Fraine and child, of this city; Mrs. J. W. Bayne and two children, Engineer Donnelly, of London, and Herman Ponsford, of this city, who died this morning from the injuries he received by the explosion of the oil tank. He suffered fearful agony, the flesh from his arms hanging down over his hands. He was bricklayer, 31 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children. In addition to the above, Mrs. S. G. Zealand, whose husband and child perished, is also so fearfully burned that her recovery is doubtful. Her husband was killed outright, her leg is broken in two places.

A large number of persons were more or less badly burned, some probably fatally, by the explosion of the oil tank.

George Angles, the fireman of the wrecked, train is a resident of this city. In speaking of the disaster he said:—"Just as we came in plain sight of the semaphore at the M. C. R. crossing we saw that it was up and an M. C. R. freight train was running slowly across the Port Stanley track We were running smartly. Donnely reversed his engine and put on the air brakes. He was calculating, I thought, to stop just inside the semaphore. Apparently the brakes did not work, and the next minute we struck between a couple of oil cars, but not before I asked Donnelly to jump, which he refused to do. He told me to jump, which I did. As soon as our engine struck the oil tank a big blaze went up, and the baggage car was immediately wrapped in flames. The end of the first passenger car tripped up and caught also, and was soon ablaze. Then the second oil tank caught and exploded with a terrific crash. The flames raised fully 100 feet high, catching the freight sheds on the south side of the track. I saw Donnelly taken out. He was badly burned and disfigured. I also saw several children taken out and a couple of grown persons."

BURIED IN THE RUINS.

Fears that six Bodies are Buried in the Sugar House Debris.

MONTREAL, July 16.—The Star to-night says:—The ruins of the great sugar refinery to-day presents a gloomy appearance, dense volumes of smoke and steam rising from the wreck and equally thick clouds from the debris on the western side. During the night there were some slight falls of brick, the wall adjoining the tenement houses on Queen street collapsing to a considerable extent. The branches were kept playing all night, but the great heat imparted by the fire to the brickwork has made the piles of fallen matter a perfect kiln, and the process of cooling will be one of many hours yet. The water poured upon the debris is thrown off to a great extent in steam before it can penetrate to the heated matter below. The firemen do their best to make clearances and find a channel for the water, but the work is hard and dangerous. Within the ruins the heat is still so great that flames burst out viciously here and there where some wood work or other combustible matter is in contact with the open air.

The wall on the western side, where the unfortunate man Moore met his death, is in a dangerous condition, and the notice warns off the passers by. As yet no tidings have been heard of the missing man, Hector Henderson, or Beaumont, another missing man. There seems every ground for believing them to be lost. It seems incredible that Henderson should not have gone to where he had domestic ties last night, if he was alive after his escape. His little son was seen round the buildings and this morning seemed to have abandoned all hope of again meeting his father. Those who saw him go back for his clothes believe he perished in the flames. There are rumors of others missing, but it appears that several hands were taken on last Monday and of these some Italians are not well known. One of the employees of the refinery, Mr. Gouge, informed a Star reporter that three Italians, two of whom he was acquainted with, were certainly missing. He had been to their boarding house, but they had not been there since the fire.

It is thought that on Monday when the pay rolls are submitted the absence of claimants will cast some light on the number of those really missing. At present wild rumors prevail and the numbers of the lost are stated with great variation. The only grounds of anxiety at present are those stated.

The inquest on the body of poor Moore, the dead sugar boiler, was opened this afternoon.

CLUBBED TO DEATH.

A Man Arrested for What May Prove to be a Murder.

HAMILTON, July 17.—A young man named James O'Neil was arrested this morning by Detective Doyle, charged with killing Wm. McLaren. It seems that the wife of O'Neil is a woman of shady morals, and on Friday last McLaren and another young man named James Lyle, while under the influence of liquor, went around the house about 10.30 p.m. but found that O'Neil was at home. The latter came outside with a heavy billet of wood in his hand and a fight ensued, in the course of which he struck McLaren a blow on the right temple, knocking him down. McLaren was taken into a drug store near by where his wounds were dressed, and the druggist advised him to go to bed and have it attended by a doctor. McLaren went home and found that all the family had retired to rest, but immediately afterwards he began to feel very sick and went out. No more was heard of him until morning, when he was heard to come in and go to bed. When his sister tried to waken him during Saturday morning it was found that was unconscious, and about two o'clock in the afternoon he expired. After his death it was found that he had been badly maltreated, as his body was covered with bruises as from the blows of a club. The matter was not reported to the police, but Detective Doyle got wind of it and arrested O'Neil on his own authority this morning. The prisoner admits having struck someone but professed not to know who. Dr. Biggar will hold an inquest to-morrow morning. McLaren was about 22 years of age, and lived at home with his father and two sisters.

TORRID TEMPERATURES.

Saturday's Hot Wave—Intense Heat in the States.

TORONTO, July 17.—Saturday was the hottest day this summer, and in many places the hottest day known for many years. The following temperatures were recorded in the shade in the localities mentioned:

Barrie	97	Kingston	100
Brampton	97	London	96
Belleville	93	Owen Sound	97
Brantford	98	St. Catharines	92
Chatham	100	Sarnia	100
Galt	98	Toronto	97
Goderich	92	Woodstock	98

NEW YORK, July 16.—Despatches report that to-day was the hottest in many years. An unprecedentedly large number of fatal cases of sunstroke are reported from all sections of the country.

CINCINNATI, July 16.—The heat to-day is terrific. At 11 o'clock the thermometer stood at 96 in the shade. The prospect is that it will go over 100. Four deaths from sunstroke were reported yesterday, and four were reported up to noon to-day.

CHICAGO, July 17.—The number of prostrations from the heat was not so large as yesterday, there being very few labourers at work, but up to ten o'clock to-night the records of the police department show that not less than 45 persons were stricken down to-day. Of the number eighteen have already died, and probably more will die before morning. Saturday's list was appalling. The total number of cases cared for by the police was over 100, and of this number 30 or more have resulted fatally.

BOBCAYGEON.

WILD CAT.—Whilst a gentleman was trolling on Monday evening, he noticed something swimming across from the head the Island to Cottage Point. He headed it off from shore, and to his surprise discovered it to be a wild cat or lynx. He struck at it with his paddle, but only succeeded in breaking the paddle. Another canoe joined the chase, but the cat swam so fast and dodged so well that it reached the shore of the island, before they could get at it. The wild cat of Ontario has never been known to attack anyone, but it would be just as well for spooners frequenting the head of the Island to get home before ten o'clock.

A PASTORAL VISIT.—The Right Reverend Thomas Joseph Dowling, D.D., Bishop of Peterborough, paid his first visit to the Bobcaygeon parish on Saturday and Sunday last. His Lordship was accompanied by the popular priest, the Rev. F. McEvay, and assisted by his Secretary, Rev. P. Rudkins, of Peterborough. On Saturday afternoon he personally examined the candidates for confirmation, some 30 in number, and instructed them in the catechism. In the evening he met the congregation and was presented with an address. After that he administred the rite of confirmation, and concluded it by asking the boys to promise to abstain from intoxicants until they were of age, 21 years, which they did. In the afternoon the Bishop drove to Fenelon Falls, consecrating the cemetery on his way, and being accompanied to that point by a large number of the congregation.—Independent.

United Labor Party.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The United Labor, which has had such a wonderful growth, especially in New York under the guidance of Mr. Henry George and his paper the Standard, held its first celebration in New York City on Monday. Mr. John McMackin addressed the meeting and said; "The favored few by the use of money have so manipulated the American Government that it is a disgrace to civilization, and there is no longer such a thing as pure republican government in this country. Now, when the United Labor party is trying to make our National Government again popular we tell these monopolists that we desire to make the American people worthy of their own ancestor. We have been called Communists, Socialists and destroyers of the peace, but we only desire to see the American Republic live and prosper and be what the Declaration of Independence intended that it should be." It will be remembered that it was on account of Mr. McMackin's being chairman of the mass meeting in honor of Mr. O'Brien when he was in New York that he refused to attend.

LATEST CABLE NEWS.

ECHOES OF THE BASTILE FETE.

PARIS, July 16.—The Petite Journal publishes a Deroulde circular to the effect that it induced the League of Paris to enter the Radical party. Advocate Barron, of the Court of Appeals, made his appearance on the streets here on Thursday, crying, "A bas Grevy." On the night of the fete some persons who were riding in cabs were compelled to alight by the mob on the streets. Those who refused to do so were forcibly removed from the vehicles. A hostile demonstration was made at the German embassy in Bordeaux, and windows were broken in the office of the local Government organ.

DAVITT'S UNHEEDED ADVICE.

THE EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

LONDON, July 16.—The Standard says the break down of the Egyptian Convention is a decided advantage to England, who stands unpledged before Europe and may continue the occupation of Egypt as long as necessary.

A CONSERVATIVE MEETING.

LONDON, July 16.—The Conservative party has called a meeting for Tuesday next to consider the situation, especially in connection with the Land Bill, notices of amendments to which have already been presented, twenty-nine of them being in Mr. Morley's name.

THE EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

LONDON, July 16.—The newspapers this morning interpret Sir James Ferguson's report relative to the Egyptian Convention in the House of Commons as signifying that the Convention is a failure. The News says: "The humiliating farce upon which £30,000 has been squandered, reflects the utmost discredit upon the Premier and his colleagues."

AN UNGENTLEMANLY REMARK.

LONDON, July 16.—A heated discussion occurred in the lobby of the House of Commons to-night, between Dr. Tanner and Mr. Walter Hubbard, [illegible] during which the former called Mr. [illegible] "a diamond snob." The Speaker of the House will be informed of the affair and trouble is expected.

CRIME IN FRANCE.

PARIS, July 16.—The Senate has decided to postpone for a month the discussion of M. Gavardie's motion to question the Government regarding the growth of crime and scandal in France.

POSTAL CHANGES WANTED.

LONDON, July 16.—One hundred members of the House have formed a committee for the purpose of endeavoring to effect postal and telegraph changes between the Mother Country and the colonies.

FELL IN WITH A WOMAN.

The Story of an English Naval Officer Who Fled to America.

A Chicago despatch says:—Private information was received here to-night that to-day, in Kansas City, Wm. H. W. Markham, assistant paymaster of the British war vessel Espior, was arrested on a charge of forging the name of his superior officer for amounts aggregating about $15,000. The crimes were committed over a year ago, when the Espior was cruising off the coast of China. For some time past Markham, under the name of Gaylor, has been acting as agent at Kansas City for a well-known insurance company. He has been constantly shadowed night and day since June 13 until this morning, the detectives being unwilling to arrest him until the extradition papers and all other preliminaries had been first arranged. Though the culprit's whereabouts have been known only since June 13, the detectives have unceasingly been tracing him step by step ever since the forgeries were discovered in the spring of 1886.

The story of the chase forms a marvellous record. Markham left his ship ostensibly for a vacation, and all clue to him had been lost before his misdeed came to light and the case was formally handed over to Scotland Yard detectives in London. Meantime Markham was in Shanghai, where he was spending money with a prodigality worthy of an East Indian Rajah. It was in Shanghai that he fell in with an American adventuress named Gussie Bland, who had just arrived from San Francisco and who was travelling as Mrs. Deforest. Upon her Markham lavished nearly everything that he had, and soon after when he became aware that officers were searching him out he had barely enough funds to bring himself to San Francisco.

Gussie Bland returned to California on almost the next steamer after Markham. She went to Los Angeles, but when the British officials had finally located her officers in disguise inveigled themselves into Mrs. Deforest's graces, and one night, when champagne loosened her tongue, got her talking of a mysterious correspondent. She ridiculed him mercilessly as a soft Englishman who had thrown away a fortune on her, and was still as infatuated as ever, incidentally dropping the fact that he was then in Kansas City. Immediately an arrangement was made by the detectives whereby the clerk at the post office window in Kansas City was to drop a pencil outside the counter as a signal when Markham asked for his mail. So confused did the clerk become that twice he failed and Markham escaped. The third time the detective was given the signal. Markham was intensely suspicious, and had acquired the habit of starting in the opposite direction from which he intended to go and then turning, take a street car going the wrong way and jumping off to take the one he wanted, all the time watching to see if he was pursued. In spite of these tactics he was shadowed constantly a month until to-day, when all was ready, the arrest was made, and to-morrow morning early he will be started on the road to England and a long term of penal servitude.

BOYCOTTING WHEAT GAMBLERS.

WHATEVER opinion individuals may form of Master Workman T. V. Powderly, the head of the Knights of Labor, and whatever they may think of the ends at which he aims or the means he adopts to attain them, they must at least admit that he is a man of great ability and that he often displays very shrewd common sense. In the Journal of United Labor he says:—

"The lesson taught our members by the experience of the last six weeks is to keep their eyes open and to keep them turned toward the Produce Exchanges of New York, Chicago and other large cities, and the moment the grain and produce gambler stacks the cards and announces that there is a scarcity in a certain article of food, that the price must go up in consequence, every member should resolve, and resolve out loud, that until the unhallowed hand of the speculator has been removed from the control of the article in question, not a pound nor an ounce more than can be avoided will be purchased. This may be regarded in the light of a boycott notice. That is exactly what I intended it for, and had I the power vested in me to make the order imperative, I would order every member so far as in him lies the power, to place an eternal boycott on every grain and stock gambler in the United States and Canada. The man who cleared the $5,500,000 deliberately robbed every man, woman and child who uses wheat. In comparison to these men Dick Turpin and Sixteen String Jack were honest men. It is time for the people to [illegible] to robbing the people, so that a law can be passed to punish those who gamble in food while others starve for want of it? I feel safe in making the assertion that if Christ should visit Wall Street, New York, he would find greater rogues than he drove from the Temple of old. Along with their being scourged each rascal of them should be chained to his place on the floor of the Exchange, with a loaf of bread and a well done steak suspended within smelling distance of his nose, so that the dispensers of poverty would get a taste of the hunger they bring to the homes of the poor. To make a farmers' exchange and a laborers' exchange successful we, the people, must control the telegraph system of this country, so that accurate and ready means of transmitting information may be within the reach of all. To-day the main stem of the telegraph lines of this country is in the hands of monopoly, which has no feeling for merchant, manufacturer or laborer."

Whether he proposes the right means, or whether he is likely thus to be able to check these gamblers, we need not now discuss, but all who are not interested in these rings will sympathize with him in his indignation at the roguery of men who thus make gambling counters of the "staff of life." We beg however to enter our protest against his including Canada in his condemnation. There is little, if any, of such iniquitous gambling practiced in the Dominion. Probably under Commercial Annexation we might be defiled by touching the pitch. As to his remarks about the evils of telegraph monopoly it is well to remember that Mr. Wiman, the apostle of annexation, is one of the prominent heads of the ring, especially as regards Canada, where the monopoly of which he is the head has absorbed competing lines, by means as to which some Montreal men speak without much reticense.

THE ACTUAL PRICES.

SINCE receiving Mr. Cluxton's letter we have been watching the market reports. We find besides the articles previously mentioned, as to which the prices are more favorable for our farmers in Canada than in the United States, that in Toronto the current quotations for cattle, sheep and lambs are better than in Chicago or Buffalo, which perhaps may be more suitably compared with Toronto. Thus without regard to the duty, our farmers would find it more profitable at present to sell in Canada than in the United States. This shows what a delusion it is to look merely at the duty and assume that it is so much taken from the Canadian farmer. This mere theory will not stand the test of actual figures. Of course there may occasionally be times and there may be some special localities where it may be more profitable for the Canadian farmer to sell to the United States or for the United States farmer to sell to Canada, but for this we have provided on our part by our standing offer on our statute book of reciprocity. This, however, is very different from the misrepresentation made by the Canadian farmer that he would gain so much by being allowed free access to United States markets as to more than compensate him for the injury done to his more important home market by the importation of foreign goods instead of our manufacturing them ourselves. We challenge Mr. Cluxton or any one else to take the average product of an Ontario farm and set down in plain figures the money it would bring to the farmer at market quotations both here and in convenient markets of the United States. No advocate of Commercial Union will accept the challenge and give actual figures of actual transaction, for this would show the fallacy of the annexationists claims, so instead of the facts they confuse their hearers and sometimes themselves by a maze of theoretical disquisitions on customs duties or anything rather than market prices.

IF coal can be raised 25c. per ton in Chicago in this weather what will happen along later in the season when the thermometer drops?—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A thought occurs to us. Did the Peterborough REVIEW not intimate that the advance in the original cost of coal was suggested by the action of the Canadian minister in abolishing the duty thereon? And what has the raising of the quotations at Chicago to do with the Canadian tariff? Somebody must have got coal considerations considerably mixed.—Kingston Whig.

The REVIEW did not intimate that the advance in the cost of coal was suggested by Canada abolishing the duty. It intimated that the coal-monopoly ring exacted the last cent it could in each locality according to circumstances, and on this principle it fixes Chicago prices. According to the Whig's theory with a rise of 25c. in Chicago there should still be a fall of 25c. in Ottawa by the abolition of the duty. But there is at Ottawa an outcry that there is a rise there also of 25c., the same as in Chicago, so the Pennsylvania ring saves the duty. Somebody has, as the Whig says, got coal considerations considerably mixed, which is caused by the Whig relying upon free-trade theories instead of looking at the actual prices.

WE learn from a contemporary that recently:—

"In one week there was shipped from, Buffalo by canal, 2,083,408 bushels of wheat, while all the railroads combined only hauled 434,100 bushels into New York city during the same week. Evidently the canals have not yet lost their usefulness."

And what the Erie Canal is thus doing for the farmers and for New York, the Trent Valley Canal would do even more efficiently for our farmers and for Montreal. Yet the people of Montreal do not appear to see their interest in this great navigable route, and give us hardly any assistance in urging its speedy completion. Though we would be glad of their help, we will continue to work without it until the route is opened, and then Montreal will learn its value in a practical manner.

DOMESTIC AND USEFUL.

Old potatoes thicken yeast more than new ones.

Some one has estimated that one barrel of flour will last one person a year.

In making oatmeal gruel take one tablespoonful of oatmeal wet in cold water to one quart of boiling salted water; boil one hour; strain and serve.

For cold in the head, Dr. G. E. Dobson recommends the inhalation of the vapour of camphor and steam. The vapour is made to come in contract with the outer surface of the face, surrounding the nose by means of a paper cone placed with the narrow end downward in a vessel containing hot water and a drachm of coarsely-powdered or shredded camphor. If this is continued at a time, and repeated three or four times in as many hours, a cure is usually effected.—Health.

The following, though old to some, may be new to others, and will enable the latter to make a simple barometer for themselves:—Two drachms of camphor, half a drachm of muriate of ammonia, and two ounces of proof spirits, in a glass tube or a narrow phial, will make a good weather guide. In dry weather the solution will remain clear. On the approach of change, minute stars will rise up in the liquid, and stormy weather will be indicated by a very disturbed condition of the chemical combination.

Cleanliness is the grand secret of keeping a house free from vermin. If the vermin consist of bugs very stringent measures will have to be taken to thoroughly eradicate them. All old paper should be taken from the walls and burned. The facings of doors and windows and the linings in other parts of the house should be removed, sprinkled with naptha and set on fire, and allowed to burn till the naphtha is consumed. The house should then be thoroughly fumigated with sulphur, after which the walls should be washed with water, to which a little carbolic acid has been added.

SHIRT FRONTS.—The glossing iron should always be heated on a closed stove, or the surface gets dirtied and scratched. You work with it pretty much as with an ordinary iron, only it goes more quickly, as the surface is already smooth and stiff. Iron up from the point towards the neck, leaning your weight full and evenly on the iron, as the eventual glaze depends a good deal on the pressure applied with the glossing iron. If the front is of good material and well starched, a perfect and brilliant gloss should be simply a question of care. For the starch, dissolve a little borax in some cold water (about a teaspoonful is enough for a good basin of starch); when well mixed, stir in sufficient white starch and a little "linen glaze," which any chemist will supply. Knead the collars and fronts thoroughly in this mixture, rubbing it well and evenly into them; clap them and wring them out; then roll them up in a clean linen cloth, taking care one piece does not touch the other. Leave them in this till you wish to iron them, when they must be unrolled, and, if dry, sprinkle with a little cold water. Iron them carefully with an ordinary iron, then damp them lightly with a clean wet muslin rag, and use the glossing iron steadily till the proper gloss is attained; and hang them before the fire to stiffen.

OVER WORKED Women

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a single purpose, being a most potent specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00. A large treatise on Diseases of Women, profusely illustrated with colored plates and numerous wood-cuts, sent for 10 cents in stamps. JESS.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD

And so the time wore heavuy along till at last there came a dreadful day which Bessie will never forget as long as she lives. It was the 20th of February—just a week before the final disaster at Majuba Hill. Bessie was standing idly on the veranda, looking down the long avenue of blue gums, where the shadows formed a dark network to catch the wandering rays of light. The place looked very peaceful, and certainly no one could have known from its appearance that a bloody war was being waged within a few miles. The Kaffirs came and went about their work as usual, or made pretense to; but now and then a close observer might see them stop and look toward the Drakensberg and then say a few words to their neighbor about the wonderful thing that had come to pass that the Boers were beating the great white people, who came out of the sea and shook the earth with their tread. Whereon the neighbor would take the opportunity to relax from toil and squat down and have a pinch of snuff, and relate in what particular collection of rocks on the hillside he and his wives slept the last night, for when the Boers are out on commando the Kaffirs will not sleep in their huts for fear of being surprised and shot down. Then the pair would spend half an hour or so in speculating on what would be their fate when the Boers had eaten up the Englishmen and taken back the country, and finally came to the conclusion that they had better emigrate to Natal.

Bessie, on the veranda, noted all this going on, every now and again catching snatches of the lazy rascals' talk, which chimed in but too sadly with her own thoughts. Turning from it impatiently, she began to watch the hens marching solemnly about the drive, followed by their broods. This picture, too, had a sanguinary background, for under an orange tree two rival cocks were fighting furiously. They always did this about once a week, nor did they cease from troubling till each retired, temporarily blinded, to the shade of a separate orange tree, where they spent the rest of the week in recovering, only to emerge when the cure was effected and fight their battles over again. Meanwhile a third cock, young in years but old in wisdom, who steadily refused to fight when attacked, looked after the hens in dispute. To-day the fight was particularly ferocious, and, fearing that the combatants would have no eyes left at all if she did not interfere, Bessie called to the old Boer hound who was lying in the sun on the veranda:

"Hi, Stomp, Stomp—hunt them, Stomp!"

Up jumped Stomp and, made a prodigious show of furiously attacking the embattled cocks; it was an operation to which he was used, and which afforded him constant amusement. Suddenly, however, as he dashed toward the trees he stopped midway, his simulated wrath ceased, and, instead, an expression of real disgust came upon his honest face. Then the hair along his backbone stood up like the quills upon the fretful porcupine, and he growled.

"A strange Kaffir, I expect," said Bessie to herself.

Stomp hated strange Kaffirs. She had scarcely got the words out before they were justified by the appearance of a native. He was a villainous looking fellow, with one eye, and nothing on but a pair of ragged trousers fastened round the waist with a greasy leather strap. In his wool, however, were stuck several small distended bladders, such as are generally worn by medicine men and witch doctors. In his left hand he held a long stick cleft at the end. In the cleft was a letter.

"Come here, Stomp," said Bessie, and as she did so a wild hope shot across her heart like a meteor across the night; perhaps the letter was from John.

The dog obeyed her unwillingly enough, for he evidently did not like that Kaffir; and when he saw that Stomp was well out of the way the Kaffir himself followed. He was an insolent fellow, and took no notice of Bessie beyond squatting himself down upon the drive in front of her.

"What is it?" said Bessie, in Dutch, her lips trembling as she spoke.

"A letter," answered the man.

"Give it to me."

"No, missie, not till I have looked at you to see if it is right. Light yellow hair that curls—one," checking it on his fingers, "yes, that is right; large blue eyes—two, that is right; big and tall, and fair as a star—yes, the letter is for you, take it," and he poked the long stick up almost into her face.

"Where is it from?" asked Bessie, with sudden suspicion, recoiling a step.

"Wakkerstroom last."

"Who is it from?"

"Read it, and you will see."

Bessie took the letter, which was wrapped up in a piece of old newspaper, from the cleft of the stick and turned it over and over doubtfully. Most of us have a mistrust of strange looking letters, and this letter was unusually strange. To begin with, it had no address whatever on the dirty envelope, which was curious. In the second place, the envelope was sealed apparently with a threepenny bit.

"Are you sure it is for me?" asked Bessie.

"Yah, yah—sure, sure," answered the native, with a rude laugh. "There are not many such white girls in the Transvaal. I have made no mistake. I have 'smelt you out.'" And he began to go through his catalogue—"Yellow hair that curls," etc.—again.

Then Bessie opened the letter. Inside was an ordinary sheet of paper written over in a bold, firm, yet slightly unpracticed writing that Bessie knew well enough, and the sight of which filled her with a presentiment of evil. It was Frank Muller's.

She turned sick and cold, but could not choose, and read as follows:

"CAMP NEAR PRETORIA, Feb. 15.

"DEAR MISS BESSIE—I am sorry to have to write to you, but though we have quarreled lately, and also your good uncle, I think it my duty to do so, and send this to your hand by special runner. Yesterday was a sortie made by the poor folk in Pretoria, who are now as thin with hunger as the high veldt oxen just before spring. Our arms were again victorious; the redcoats ran away and left their ambulance in our hands, carrying with them many dead and wounded. Among the dead was the Capt. Niel"——

Here Bessie gave a sort of choked cry, and let the letter fall over the veranda, to one of the posts of which she clung with both her hands.

The ill favored native below grinned, and, picking the paper up, handed it to her.

She took it, feeling that she must know all, and read on like one reads in some ghastly dream—

"who has been staying on your uncle's farm. I did not see him killed myself, but Jan Vanzyl shot him, and Rol Dirk Oosthuizen and Carolus, a Hottentot, saw them pick him up and carry him away. They say that he was quite dead. For this I fear you will be sorry, but it is the chance of war, and he died fighting bravely. Make my obedient compliments to your uncle. We parted in anger, but I hope in the new circumstances that have arisen in the land to show him that I, for one, bear no anger. Believe me, dear Miss Bessie, your humble and devoted servant,

"FRANK MULLER."

Bessie thrust the letter into the pocket of her dress and then again caught hold of the veranda post and supported herself by it, while the light of the sun seemed to visibly fade out of the day before her eyes and replace itself by a cold blackness in which there was no break. He was dead—her lover was dead! The glow had gone from her life as it seemed to be going from the day, and she was left desolate. She had no knowledge of how long she stood thus, staring with wide eyes at the sunshine she could not see. She had lost her count of time; all things were phantasmagorical and unreal; all that she could realize was this one overpowering, crushing fact—John was dead!

"Missie," said the ill favored messenger below, fixing his one eye upon her poor sorrow stricken face and yawning.

There was no answer.

"Missie," he said again, "is there any answer? I must be going. I want to get back in time to see the Boers take Pretoria."

Bessie looked at him vaguely. "Yours is a message that needs no answer," she said. "What is, is."

[To be continued.]

FARM AND GARDEN.

The wheat crop of the British North-West Territory—the old Hudson's Bay Company's empire—is estimated at 5,000,000 bushels yearly.

Gooseberries should be planted on heavy and rather moist soil and mulched heavily, so as to keep the ground moist and cool. Mildew on the fruit is thus avoided.

A new asparagus, found in the steppes of Akhal-Tekis, lately annexed by Russia, is said to have stalks nearly as thick as a man's arm, and growing to a height of five or six feet. In flavour it equals the best cultivated varieties.

Where much poultry is raised on a farm it is recommended to include a few Guinea fowls to serve as a practical protection to young chicks from hawks and enemies which may be scared away by the alarming cry of the speckled birds.

The cattle raisers of the west and south complain that the grazing lands are being rapidly absorbed for farming purposes, and that stock raising on a large scale must soon end, for want of cheap feed and other indispensable conveniences.

A guard from bugs is made in this way: Take four strips of wood three inches wide and one or two feet long (or according to the area of the hill) and nail together, forming a square. Tack mosquito-netting over this and set the frame over the hill, pressing it into the soil somewhat, so that the beetles can not creep in. Plants are greatly protected thereby.

To keep sparrows from your shed you might try the effect of hanging up an artificial kite or stuffed hawk at each end of the shed. Fix a ring in the back of the hawk and suspend from the roof with a piece of string or wire, and another string attached to the same ring, and within reach of the hand, might be used for swinging the hawk to and fro to frighten the sparrows when desired.

Gardeners who train their tomato plants also practice pinching back the side branches and stopping others just beyond where the fruit is formed. This thinning out needs to be judiciously done. A little brush or straw is sometimes placed around vines trained as described, to prevent any of the fruit touching the ground, thus keeping it in good condition. Any device that will keep the vines upright, of course, answers essentially the same purpose as the ones mentioned.

Give them a Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

When a silk hat becomes wet, or from other causes has lost its smoothness and gloss, cleanse it carefully from all dust, then with a silk handkerchief apply petrolatum evenly, and smooth down with the same handkerchief until it is dry, smooth and glossy. This will make it look as good as new.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there was a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in half pound tins, by grocers labelled thus:
